WICKED LOCAL

You can go home again, but it isn't always easy, as best-selling author Susanna Kaysen recollects in Cambridge. Largely drawn from her own peripatetic childhood and full of vivid evocations of its title town, Kaysen's new novel is a prequel of sorts to Girl, Interrupted, her celebrated 1993 memoir of her time at McLean Hospital. Its narrator is a grade-school-aged Susanna, whose Cantabrigian clan uproots to Europe, following her father's academic career to England, Italy and Greece. She longs for her hometown, but upon returning struggles to fit into a place that doesn't quite match her memories. Hear Kaysen's stories from the other side of the river at the Boston Public Library on March 20. / Hannah Weintraub

BACK DECK Professional Backyard Grilling [2 West Street (Corner of Washington), Boston, 617-670-0320, BackDeckBoston.com] Drawing inspiration from a New England back yard and featuring a menu of grill-focused favorites and patio sipping cocktails, Back Deck is an urban oasis in downtown Boston. With floor to ceiling windows and an open kitchen, Back Deck brings the outdoors inside and provides the perfect setting to enjoy the fun and flavor of hard-wood charcoal grilling year round.

THE BLACK ROSE [160 State Street, Boston, 617-742-2286, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Voted one of America's top ten Irish establishments, The Black Rose is Boston's premier Irish pub and restaurant. Established in 1976, the pub is located in the historic Faneuil Hall/Quincy Market area of Boston, and known far and wide for its convivial atmosphere, good food and live Irish entertainment. The menu features honest, made-from-scratch food including traditional Irish fare, award winning clam chowder, fish and chips, native lobster, aged Black Angus cuts of beef, and of course Mother Sweeney's corned beef – a recipe from Mother Sweeney herself! For thirty years The Black Rose has offered live Irish music seven nights a week. Memorable guests on stage have included members of the Chieftans, flutist James Galway, Tommy Makim, Liam Clancy, John Denver, and a once relatively unknown member of an Irish rock group called U2.

BROWNSTONE [11 Dartmouth Street, Boston, MA, 617-867-4142, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Situated on the border of Back Bay and the South End, Brownstone is named for the style and elegance reflective of the architecture of Boston's two neighborhoods. From the hardwood flooring to the Venetian plaster ceiling, the interior exudes classic warmth with a sleek and intimate bar made of mahogany and granite. Brownstone's menu features small plates with big flavors! It also has one of the best brunches in Back Bay and Monthly Beer and Wine Dinners.

FORUM [755 Boylston St Boston MA 02116, 857-991-1831, forumboston.com] Gather, indulge, repeat! Forum is located across from the Mandarin Oriental hotel and Lord & Taylor shops, overlooking glitzy Boylston Street, a hotspot for locals, tourists and celebrities. Two distinct floors, al fresco dining, two bars, and a modern function room for up to 60 guests. Indulge in New American cuisine such as Duck Confit, Halibut on Lobster Chorizo Risotto, Bone Marrow Encrusted Filet, or Wild Mushrooms Gnocchi. Open Daily.

HURRICANE O'REILLY'S [150 Canal Street, Boston, 617-722-0161, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] It's Hurricane season on Canal Street! The spirit of Mardi Gras and the French Quarter in the heart of the city. Serving Irish, American and Cajun specialties and conveniently located just steps away from the TD Garden. Voted best "Hockey Bar" in Boston by USA today, Hurricane's is the perfect place to gather pre- and post- game. After the sun sets on Canal Street, Hurricane's lights up into one of Boston's hottest nightclubs with a top 40 play list, illuminating disco lights and 6,800 square feet of Mardi Gras spirit.

MISTRAL [223 Columbus Ave, Boston, 617-867-9300, mistralbistro.com] Located in Boston's stylish South End, Mistral features the award winning French Mediterranean cuisine of Chef/Owner Jamie Mammano. The dining room's high ceilings and arched floor to ceiling windows encircle the candlelit room and evoke a warm feeling of casual sophistication. Le Salon du Mistral, Mistral's private dining room provides an intimate setting for gatherings of 60 seated for brunch, lunch and dinner and up to 80 for a cocktail reception. Sunday Brunch. Dinner Sunday-Saturday. Complimentary car service available in metro Boston.

NUBAR [16 Garden St., Cambridge MA, 02138, 617-234-1365, nubarcambridge.com] Nubar is an elegant, but comfortable neighborhood restaurant in the Harvard Square area. Chef Bill Flumerfelt's menu is creative American, with Mediterranean accents, sourcing locally whenever available. The wine list and our original cocktails will tickle your palette – great flavors for reasonable $. Whether you're in our fireside lounge, at our glowing honey onyx bar, or on our leather banquettes in the main dining room, you'll love our space.

CENTRAL WHARF CO., the Financial District's newest eatery!

OSTRA [1 Charles Street South, Boston, 617.421.1200, www.ostraboston.com] Ostra, located in Boston's Back Bay, is a contemporary Mediterranean seafood restaurant. Chef/Owner Jamie Mammano and Executive Chef Mitchell Randall focus on specialty seafood found throughout the Mediterranean and regions within the U.S. The dining room at Ostra evokes a sense of style and sophistication in a comfortable and inviting setting. Ostra also offers a fine bar and lounge area featuring live piano entertainment. Ostra's private dining room accommodates up to 42 for a seated event and 70 for a cocktail reception. Dinner Sunday through Saturday. Complimentary car service available in metro Boston.

TEATRO [177 Tremont Street, Boston, 617-778-6841, teatroboston.com] A leading player in downtown's Theatre District, Teatro offers Chef Owner Jamie Mammano's take on rustic Italian cuisine. The restaurant recalls lavish stage productions and high drama with its stunning arched mosaic ceiling and marble inlaid walls. The triumphant curtain call — a riveting open kitchen. Enjoy pre- and post-show cocktails, plus your star turn for dinner Tuesday through Sunday evenings. (Closed Monday).

Bars & Clubs

DILLON'S [955 Boylston Street, Boston, 617-421-1818, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Dillon's blends after-work chill with cocktail chic. It's the ideal spot to bring a date, loosen your tie after work or watch the game with friends. Built in 1887 and a historic landmark in Boston, the venue is named after Capt. S. Dillon, who was stationed here from 1920-1950. Like its namesake, Dillon's is known for its warm hospitality, engaging people and spirited nightlife. An all American menu, two levels, and the best patio in the Back Bay make Dillon's a local favorite. The best place on Boylston to celebrate!

AND GLATT KOSHER ON SATURDAYS

Because Bostonians can't celebrate anything without feeling that they're somehow improving the world, a group of high-profile philanthropists banded together for a novel Mardi Gras celebration, interpreting the term literally.

Fat Tuesday to Fight Childhood Obesity took place at the Cyclorama and featured dessert stations by chefs like Ming Tsai, Joanne Chang, Barbara Lynch, Tiffani Faison, Christopher Coombs, Ken Oringer and Michael Schlow. Spotted grazing among the herd were such sweet-toothed sweeties as blogging ballerina Rachel Cossar, the hale and hearty CJ Husk, PR poobah Marlo Fogelman and one guest who said, "Just looking around is giving me cavities."

The evening's raffle prize was a trip to D.C. for lunch with first lady Michelle Obama, while the evening's prize for biggest jackass went to the person who popped a cookie in his mouth and proclaimed, "I'm only gluten-free on weekdays."

WHAT'S IN A NAME?

The phrasing on the invitation was rather vague, but the Foundation for Transubstantiation Believers Doubting held its first annual casino night at the Mandarin Oriental.

Looking spiffy in designer eveningwear were such glamour-pusses as co-chairs Joshua Janson and Laura Baldini, Back Bay blonde Beth Dickerson, the interchangeable Matt Greer and Mark Andrus, court jester Andy Levine, besties Ashley Bernon and Penny Fireman, the ubiquitous Ernie Boch Jr., white-hot fitness guru Chad Flahive, post-modern Pee-wee Sean William Donovan and the sister act of Sam and Kimmy Strauss.

The gaming tables heated up as the booze began to flow, and one woman playing craps yelled "Yahtzee!" every time she threw the dice.

As for the purpose of the evening, one guest mused, "It's one of those charities that tugs at your heartstrings, but I can't remember exactly what they do," to which her inebriated friend said, "Well, it's gotta be called the TBD Foundation for a reason."

PUFF PASTRY INCLUDED

The political football du jour got an evening in the spotlight when Mass Medical Marijuana hosted Rocky Mountain High, a Colorado-themed dinner dance held at the Harvard Club.

Prominent among the throng: gubernatorial hopeful Charlie Baker having a tête-à-tête with U.S. Sen. Elizabeth Warren, handsome hotelier Dick Friedman, bicycling do-gooder Billy Starr and the flawless Meredith, tall drink of water Tom Matlack and his gorgeous other half, Elena, MFA head honcho Malcolm Rogers, horse of a different feather Doris Yaffe, the show-stopping Evelyn Treacy, Chestnut Hillions Vicky and Tom Whitney, best-selling author Ben Bradlee Jr. with his delightful wife, Jan Saragoni, Mount Vernon Street nabobs Suki and Miguel de Bragança, and so on and so forth through Who's Who, The Social Register, the Almanach de Gotha and the western suburban white pages.

Tables with names like "Gangstah Kush" and "Blueberry Diesel" were scattered with green M&M's customized with a cannabis leaf, and a continuous loop of Harold & Kumar clips played on a giant screen.

"I don't smoke pot, but I do want to see it legalized," observed one guest with a wry smile. "My portfolio's heavily invested in snack foods."

ONLY THE BIRDS WERE TWEETING...

There was a strict ban on the use of smartphones at the fundraiser for Moms In Love with Facebook, a newly formed support group aimed at weaning women away from posting interminable photos of their children (be they human, canine or otherwise) and quoting their toddlers' latest pithy aphorisms on social media.

'Held under a tent in a parking lot (which made it undesirable to check in on Foursquare), the luncheon attracted the likes of brunette beauty Julie Hume Gordon, delectable fashionista Tonya Chen Mezrich, radio babe Sue Brady Hartigan, redheaded cutie Lauren Beekham Falcone, poochy princess Erica Corsano, publicity pimp Kate Shamon, hot-blooded Colombian Cristina Isabel Vazquez and token male John Lam.

A good deal of sauvignon blanc was consumed to take the edge off of unplugging for a few hours, and one table erupted in laughter when someone pointed out what the charity's acronym would be. However, the afternoon's most insightful comment came from the person who said, "This party's a double blessing. No one can Instagram pictures of their goddamn lunch."

OH, BY THE WAY...APRIL FOOLS'! ◆

BATTER UP

CRITIC GERALD EARLY FAMOUSLY opined, "I think there are only three things America will be known for 2,000 years from now when they study this civilization: the Constitution, jazz music and baseball." The latter two especially seem to belong in the same breath—thanks to Ken Burns, sure, but also because jazz may owe its very name to baseball. A little more than a century ago, minor-league pitcher Ben Henderson gave us the first recorded use of the term in an attempt to describe the style of his new curveball, but the word itself soon swerved, taking on new momentum and meaning as a musical genre.

As it happens, both of those great American inventions get some play in this issue. (Sorry, Constitution, we'll try to squeeze you in next time.) Scott Lauber takes a look at the unique brand of clubhouse camaraderie the Red Sox have built during the past year—a rarity in the age of free agency, a factor in their worst-to-first rebound and, just maybe, a secret weapon in their quest to repeat as World Series champs. Ezra Dyer offers a handy season preview, covering the bases with answers to 10 key questions (plus ruminations on bees, beards and betting). And Lydia Santangelo serves up a fashion spread shot on location in Fort Myers, Fla., where Shane Victorino, Jon Lester and Mike Napoli—three very good sports—paused from spring training to pose in some spring styles. Elsewhere, Jonathan Soroff interviews Grammy-winning vibraphonist, longtime Berklee educator and, now, memoirist Gary Burton, tapping the fusion-jazz pioneer for insight into his mean four-mallet technique. Here's to our heavy hitters, of all stripes.

DESIGNER DOUGHNUTS ARE THE NEW FROSTED FRONTIER »»

SWEET DREAMS: Decadent options such as doughnuts with crushed-petal icing are now a delicious reality.

Kane's Hibiscus Doughnut

Hole Lotta Love

The modern doughnut may date back to 1847, when New Englander Elizabeth Gregory fried up pastries for her ship captain son's voyages. Her son, Hanson, took credit for poking a hole through the dough. But neither thought to top them with bacon bits or Heath Bar crumbles.

Doughnuts are rising as the new designer dessert—with former Top Chef contestant Stephanie Cmar leaving her No. 9 Park post to open an artisanal doughnut pop-up shop, Somerville's Union Square Donuts attracting lines with its gourmet menu and the Food Network creating a Cupcake Wars-style doughnut competition. Now, mom-and-pop shops and restaurants are experimenting beyond Boston Cream, and though these creative combinations may be difficult to dip in coffee cups, they're still a slam dunk.

Veteran shops are upping their classics with smoky, sour and even floral flavors. Kane's Donuts, established in 1955 in Saugus, is famous for its honey dip, which now shares the case with flavors like crème brulee, turtle and pink lemonade. "Doughnuts are the new cupcake," says Paul Delios, co-owner of Kane's, who's currently developing rose petal and hibiscus doughnuts, topped with crushed-petal icing. Southie's Doughboy also sweetened up its selection with strawberry-frosted Fruity Pebbles and maple bacon doughnuts, thanks to some insight from the owner's daughter. The 37-year-old neighborhood mainstay bakes most of its flavors in miniature sizes too.

Local chefs aren't glazing over the trend either. Island Creek Oyster Bar's pastry chef, Lauren Kroesser, added her brown butter bacon doughnut with pecan toffee crumble, featuring house-cured, thick-cut bacon, to menus last month. Strip-T's pastry chef Jake Novick-Finder changes toppings seasonally, creating flavors that have included rhubarb and Szechuan pepper as well as corn, basil and cheddar. Creamsicles inspired his new vanilla orange tarragon doughnut, a sourdough brioche filled with vanilla cream and topped with Cara Cara orange glaze and tarragon chips. "It's just fun to heighten something that is so delicious on its own," Novick-Finder says. "A plain doughnut is far from plain." / Hannah Sheinberg

RIFRULLO REVS UP

A BROOKLINE NEWBIE HOPES TO SPREAD.

SPRING CHICKEN: [illegible]

RIFRULLO CAFE HAS ONLY BEEN OPEN for about six months, but as the Brookline spot hits its stride, owner Colleen Marnell-Suhanosky is already hoping for more cafes. She says she'd like to find a place in the South End to expand upon her philosophy of "the table bringing people together." Setting up a second location is nothing new to Marnell-Suhanosky, who opened Sfoglia restaurants in Nantucket and Manhattan with then-husband Ron Suhanosky.

No stranger to the local scene, she worked at two now-shuttered Boston restaurants (as a cook at Biba and pastry chef at La Bettola) before spending 15 years out of town. Back among familiar faces and places, Marnell-Suhanosky tries to make her customers feel right at home in the Cypress Street cafe. There aren't many tables in the cozy, cheerful space, but the food that graces them is big on flavor and drawn from mostly local purveyors, such as Eva's Garden and Allandale Farm. Chicken-quinoa chili, which Marnell-Suhanosky calls "a beautiful mistake"—they made quinoa-stuffed peppers, and nobody bought them—is lighter than most chili, but packs hearty, comforting flavor. It's also gluten-free, as are all of Rifrullo's muffins and the delicious-by-any-standard chocolate quinoa cake. Rifrullo serves breakfast, lunch and dinner, in addition to providing take-out meals and hosting "community dinners" about once a month at a communal table. Sounds like it'd be right up the South End's alley.

LOADED TO THE GRILLS

SPRING IS HERE—AT LEAST ACCORDING TO THE calendar—so it will soon be time to uncover the grill. Whether you're a novice or a self-appointed grill-master, there's plenty of guidance in Grill to Perfection, a new cookbook by locals Andy Husbands, Chris Hart and Andrea Pyenson. "There's no narrative; it breaks grilling down to its basics," Pyenson says. Like a textbook, it provides instruction in hot-direct grilling (searing), medium-direct grilling (roasting) and low-direct grilling, which ensures a crispy exterior and cooks the food all the way through. What's not so basic? Fun recipes like tofu tacos with sriracha aioli, grilled spam loco moco with curried slaw, and Elvis' grilled banana split.

LIGHTEN UP

PRECINCT KITCHEN + BAR OPENS WITH FORCE.

Precinct Kitchen + Bar
Loews Boston Hotel, 154 Berkeley St., Boston (617-532-3827)
precinctkitchenondbor.com

THE EDICT WAS SIMPLE: LET THERE BE LIGHT. The success of those marching orders will be apparent to anyone who remembers the dim lighting and dark wood of the now-shuttered Cuffs. The subterranean spot has found a strikingly different ambiance as Precinct Kitchen + Bar, which opened at the end of March in the Loews Boston Hotel.

The new restaurant and bar, which seats about 120 people, is part of a $10 million hotel renovation that began last year when Loews took control of the hotel. And there have been many design tweaks besides the brighter look. The wider entryway to the patio better connects the outside space to the lounge, and the energy of the lounge's new L-shaped bar flows freely into the dining room. Books, birch branches, copper pots and wine bottles line the shelves along the walls. A large bread and pickled vegetable display grabs your attention in the dining room, extending the vibe from the open kitchen. But the hotel's management knew they had to create more than simply an arresting atmosphere at the former Boston Police Department building. They had to fix the food as well.

"The food when we took over wasn't very good. Lots of frozen products, which we've gotten away from," says John Maibach, general manager of the hotel. Serving breakfast, lunch and dinner (it is in a hotel after all), Precinct Kitchen + Bar is hoping to succeed in an area that can attract not only tourists, but a business and neighborhood crowd. So chef Olivier Senoussaoui, who was brought in from the Loews Hotel in Annapolis, is aiming for a straightforward and crowd-pleasing culinary theme: fresh and local food.

Hence the dinner menu's many seafood options. The grilled bronzino is served with fennel, citrus and shallot vinaigrette, and both a scallop and a tuna cruda are offered. The clam bake makes a dramatic entrance, with clams, mussels, shrimp, corn and kielbasa served up in a pot. The menu also includes a charcuterie platter, with mounds of colorful meat carved at the slicing station that sits behind the new part of the bar. But the drink list is the real highlight of the bar, according to Maibach. Concocted by Loews' Eben Klemm, an MIT biologist turned mixologist, it features cocktails such as the Bloody Melinda (vodka, clam liquor, tomato and spices) and the Harvard (cognac, vermouth and bitters).

"We're trying to offer a Boston-centric feel. People who come to the hotel or this area want Boston, and that's what we're going to give them," Maibach says. "It's really a standalone environment that happens to be in a hotel."

"No, Thursday's out. How about never—is never good for you?"

Q&A
DRAW ATTENTION

The New Yorker cartoon editor Bob Mankoff discusses his new memoir, How About Never—Is Never Good for You?, April 9 at the Brattle Theatre.

WHAT DEFINES NEW YORKER-STYLE HUMOR?
Well, one of the words I would define it by is its very own eclecticism. You see satire, you see whimsy, you see, really, all types of humor. I think what all [the cartoons] demanded was in one way an openness to humor. An openness maybe not to the exact type of jokes that you like, but to see that it's an alternate, experimental approach to it.

HOW DO YOU DEAL WITH SUBJECTIVITY IN JOKES?
You don't intend to offend, but it's very difficult if you don't understand that cartoons are a fantasy. Humor deals with bad things that happen to people by giving us perspective on it. I think that's one of the essential coping functions of humor, that we actually joke about the things that scare us. There's a cartoon in which there's a funeral, and a casket is being carried away, and the woman is saying to another, "I had that, but much worse." We identify with that. We're not making fun of death. We're making fun of our foibles and vanities through exaggeration.

WHAT ARE THE SECRETS TO WINNING THE CAPTION CONTEST? You have to be in it to win it. Most people don't enter, so it's no big surprise they haven't won it. If you're looking at the drawing, Plan A, the best plan, is to get a very funny caption right away. It just strikes you. That's not going to happen too often. Plan B is to not just keep staring.... If there are characters in the cartoon, put yourself in that character and—I don't care what you say—just start saying something. Humor is a social phenomenon. Secondly, creativity, like anything else, gets better through practice.... And, of course, buy my book. Then you'll get in the mood, and you've got to be in a good mood to be funny. / Hannah Sheinberg

Purveyors: Pod's New Pad

The biggest change for Pod, apart from its recent relocation from Brookline Village to a corner just outside of Porter Square, might be that boutique owner Julie Baine pared down the inventory to focus on her partnered brand, Fog Linen. Every piece of the Japan-based fine textile line—apparel, tablecloths, aprons and charming linen-coated trays—is now prominently featured in the shop, alongside a selection of Pod's other well-made, well-chosen goods. Here, you can find olive wood spoons, hand-thrown pottery, bracelets, herringbone throws, handmade soaps, a few gorgeous bunches of fleurs from nearby Bow Street Flowers—and, of course, Tulip, the dog. / Elizabeth Bomze

FIRED UP

The Stoked guys want you to want their pizza.

Music buffs know Scott Riebling from Boston alt-rock outfit Letters to Cleo, but the bassist-turned-producer has been making pizza almost as long as he's been making rounds on the local club circuit. These days, he can be found behind the wheel of Stoked Wood Fired Pizza Co., a new food truck he started with Toirm Miller (of defunct vegan cart Jack and the Bean Bowl).

"When I moved to Boston, I fell in love with the city—it's my favorite city in the U.S.—but I couldn't find pizza as good as where I grew up," Riebling says.

"Scott's been making pizza for 20-plus years, and I've been partaking in his pizza parties," Miller adds. "We're doing something different. It's a little bit off the beaten path as far as traditional food trucks."

That's because their truck is equipped with a wood-burning oven. "I was on the Internet for at least three days just looking for trucks that could handle the weight capacity," Riebling says. "It's not much fun parking it, but driving it seems to be no problem."

He and Miller are confident that any logistical challenges are worth it. "What we're trying to do is provide a three-minute pizza that's very different, texture-wise, than, say, your typical Papa Gino's," explains Riebling, who admits he's dragged his family to Naples simply to try the pizza.

GOT WOOD?: Scott Riebling, left, and Toirm Miller invite you to join their pizza party

Papa Gino's, this is not. Priced around $6-$9, the 10-inch personal pizzas are made with high-end ingredients like sea salt, imported Italian tomatoes and organic herbs. They also offer a vegan pie, as well as a soy-based, dairy-free mozzarella option. And they'll be slinging that 'za till midnight Thursday through Saturday: Stoked is part of Mayor Walsh's new late-night pilot program for food trucks, launching within days of the debut of the T's late-night service.

"Pizza, college kids and late Friday nights is a pretty good combination," Miller says. "I always thought that last call and everything closed down way too early, especially the T service.... It's a long time coming."

No arguments there. But we have one more question: Won't it get unbearably hot in that truck in the summer?

"Worst case scenario, we'll just have to come up with some creative outfits," Riebling says with a laugh. "I'll be out there in my Speedo, come August." / Alexandra Cavallo

EASY BEING GREEN: Wally just might be one of the most popular members of the Red Sox.

Fenway Park is steeped in many traditions, from the Franks to the Green Monster and its newer namesake: the mascot inspired by that 37-foot wall. On April 4, Wally trades in a Hawaiian shirt for his uniform as the world champions' home season kicks off. According to Chris Bergstrom, the Red Sox's mascot program manager, Wally is preparing for a busy schedule, including his 17th birthday celebration with fellow MLB friends and up to 550 appearances—not including the 81 times he'll take the field at home. He and his size-16 feet also hit nearly as many dance floors every year. "Once he was somebody's best man at a wedding, and another time the bride chose to have Wally walk her down the aisle instead of her dad," says Bergstrom, who's been part of the team (and Wally's best friend) for 15 years. The character's rounder figure in the last decade could be attributed to all of these invites involving cake. But even while his waistline grew, Wally still managed to get lighter: The costume now weighs in at a surprising 10-12 pounds, most of which is carried in his head. He may not have a league-leading batting average, but he certainly works up a sweat (especially in July and August, as one might imagine), so he's cleaned once a day after games. Encouraging the crowd is tough work, and it will earn him some new jewelry come the home opener. "Yes," Bergstrom says, "Wally will get his ring on opening day." / Sarah Hagman

Good Eats: Lotsa Matzoh!

GET EGG-CITED: Salmon roe and grilled ramps make chef Joshua Lewin's matzoh brei stand out.

Passover Dinner, April 14–15, $42 prix fixe, Beacon Hill Bistro, 25 Charles St., Boston (617-723-7575) beaconhillhotel.com/the-bistro

The matzoh brei that's part of the Passover menu at Beacon Hill Bistro bears no resemblance to the egg scramble you'll get in a Jewish deli. That's because chef Josh Lewin makes the crackers in-house, using an ancient, robust-flavored strain of wheat called einkorn (supposedly, the same variety that Abraham and Sarah ate 10,000 years ago, and considered safe for most gluten allergies). What's more, these eggs are dressed up for spring. Topping the creamy scramble are glossy beads of salmon roe and grilled ramps. / Elizabeth Bomze

When WORDS FAIL

A new tome's iconic take on a tragedy

They say that a picture is worth a thousand words, and that's certainly true of one new book recalling the events at last year's Boston Marathon. On the eve of this year's marathon, Cambridge design firm Tank Design is releasing 102 Hours, an entirely iconographic book that tells the story of that day and those that followed. "The tragedy at the finish line, paired with the response from our local and federal governments over the next few days, was unlike anything we'd ever seen before, and it was happening in our neighborhoods, outside our windows and pouring out onto our phones, televisions and computer screens," says senior designer Elanie Blais. "We thought it would be an interesting challenge to simplify the story to its core, strip it down to just a series of events, with no words. Iconography is the simplest human language we have; it transcends all language barriers, and most cultural ones, too." All profits from the book sales will benefit Youth Design, a Boston-based nonprofit that educates and empowers urban youth to become the next generation of designers. "Something clicked when I found out how young the two Tsarnaev brothers were," Blais explains. "It resonated with me how important it is for us to provide mentors for our youth. It seems that every time there's an incident like the one last April, it happens because people feel rejected, as if their community doesn't care about them. This project is more about solving the problem from its roots." / Alexandra Cavallo

WIDE RECEIVING

A SELF-HELP TOME TAKES THE STRESS OUT OF TAKING CRITIQUE.

Thanks for the Feedback* by Douglas Stone and Sheila Heen Published by Viking, 368 pages, $28
The authors are lecturers at Harvard Law School and partners at Cambridge's Triad Consulting.

THINK OF FEEDBACK AS A BALL—SOMETIMES a horribly heavy bowling ball—tossed from giver to receiver, each of whom leaves fingerprints behind. Stone and Heen, whose negotiation clients include the White House and major corporations like Time Warner, have a lot of experience with such tricky exchanges. In their latest book, they divide feedback into three categories: appreciation, coaching and evaluation, the last of which can leave the receiver feeling defensive.

Even when discussing "objective" metrics, the identities and sensitivities of both giver and receiver come into play. Indeed, the receiver of critical evaluations may also have a negative view of the giver. Using real-world scenarios and dialogue, the authors explore how receivers can examine their blind spots, listen to their inner voice and invite specific suggestions suitable to their personal style. Taking three ever-wider steps back—considering giver and receiver as a pair, as part of a larger team and as part of the big picture—can also lend helpful perspective.

Such techniques guide readers from a frozen fixed position to one of more fluid and receptive growth. Intricately nuanced, the book is full of vignettes that show characters dealing with these sometimes-itchy situations at work and at home. And its many questions and practical takeaways provide opportunities for mini-therapy sessions of self-exploration.

FROM PAGE 190: It's easy to do relationship math such that we are the wronged party in the equation.... You e-mailed the wrong documents, and now somehow you've got feedback for me? When you attached the wrong documents, you earned yourself a lifetime membership in my "I-don't-have-to-take-feedback-from-you-about-this-problem club."

Of course that math doesn't usually add up. ◆

NAPA TIME

THIS VALLEY IS LUSH WITH MORE THAN JUST BOOZY FRUIT.

Everyone visits Napa Valley for the wine—and rightly so. Its five wine regions produce some of the world's most acclaimed vino, and with more than 400 wineries, there's no shortage of tasting options. But Napa's not simply a booze cruise. Seven area restaurants earned a total of 11 Michelin stars this year. The showrooms and galleries of even the smallest towns attract celebrity shoppers (what up, Ellen DeGeneres!). And the 35-mile-long valley offers near-endless biking, hiking and jogging trails for those who can keep the wine buzz at bay for a few hours.

Consider starting at the northernmost tip of the valley in Calistoga, a tiny town only blocks long and approximately a mile wide, for casual yet upscale pampering at the Mount View Hotel and Spa. More than a century old, the boutique property features a mineral water whirlpool and a cabana-lined heated pool. Try a natural spa treatment—a classic facial from Corinne is a must—and use the dry sauna daily to purify your wine-soaked pores.

Skin aglow and freshly pampered, head south to St. Helena to survey thrift stores and galleries. Stop at Martin Showroom, which looks part artist loft, part installation, its every surface composed of and covered with artist-made goods, ranging from the affordable ($4 wooden to-go utensils) to the outrageous but incredible (Mattia Biagi's $6,400 teddy bear sculpture dripping with tar).

Lunch at La Condesa, where executive chef Chris Mortenson will treat your taste buds to Napa Valley and Central Mexican cuisine. Order the guacamole topped with a smoky chipotle puree and toasted almonds to start, followed by the huarache hongos—a thick masa toast topped with wild mushroom, huitlacoche (don't ask, just eat it), yellow corn, Oaxaca cheese and epazote—and a side of lightly fried plantains drizzled in a creamy avocado and tomatillo salsa with just a touch of spice. You can temper the heat with a cool rice-milk horchata, or excite the burn with one of the 247 tequilas and mezcals behind the bar.

But save dessert for Tamber Bey Vineyards, just a 15-minute drive away on the sprawling 22-acre Sundance Ranch. There, real-life cowboy and winery director of hospitality Doug Eisele leads a tasting of five wines, each paired with a treat—no cheese or chocolate here, but rather a custom butter cookie, every one expertly crafted and spiced to complement the wines' respective compositions. The earthiness of the 2010 Deux Chevaux Vineyard cabernet sauvignon, for instance, intensifies with a taste of the hardwood-smoked peppered pork in the rich Black Bacon cookie.

Come evening, dine at Michelin-starred Solbar for an elegant-without-the-fuss meal, backlit by a long, low fireplace. One column of the ever-changing menu features light fare (say, a salad of green chickpeas, quinoa, grilled treviso, rose heart radish, oroblanco grapefruit and fava leaves atop a spread of avocado-poblano puree); the other, hearty dishes (like gnocchi with black truffle oil, house-cured bacon and celery root, topped with parmigiano-reggiano). Either way, be sure to splurge on one of the kitchen's generous and decadent desserts.

Move south to Napa proper, where a room at the Westin Verasa puts just a three-mile jog between you and Westwood Hills Park's incredible views of sunrise over the city. Spend the day wandering downtown, but don't miss the Oxbow Public Market, an indoor artisanal bazaar that teems with goods from local purveyors, including the tasting salon for Napa's first (legal) distillery since Prohibition. For $15, the host will fill your glass with tastings of Napa Valley Distillery vodka, bathtub gin, lemon liqueur and bottled cocktails.

After an exquisitely rich but evenly portioned dinner at Ken Frank's acclaimed La Toque, in-house at the Westin, walk across the bridge to the Thomas, where the craft cocktails pour heavy and feature local ingredients (try the St. George Spirits line from San Francisco). Here, a Scotch and soda means a smoky, potent blend of Great King Street and Caol Ila 12-year single malt with Drambuie, lemon and a house-made cherry soda that leaves a cinnamon trace on your lips. Sip up on the third-story patio that overlooks Main Street, and let the warmth from the cocktail and all the country luxury transport you to the valley below. ◆

FOOD NERDS HAVE BEEN TRAILING CHEF Michael Scelfo through Greater Boston for years, watching him elevate the cuisine at whatever restaurant was smart enough to hire him (most recently Russell House Tavern). We cheered when he finally struck out on his own, buying the Harvard Square space that had been home to the long-running Casablanca and effecting a handsome redesign: The open kitchen wrapped in brick, tile, wood, leather and vintage signage makes a difficult basement space open and inviting. And while the menu formula may sound familiar—shareable plates of American brasserie-slash-gastropub fare—Scelfo has clearly decided to challenge his customers with brash, insistent flavors at every turn, including more smokiness than is typically seen outside of a barbecue joint.

Even the simplest snacks here make an impression. Chips and three-onion dip ($8) pairs a bowl of mahogany-toned house-made potato chips with God's version of California dip, given a jolt of umami with anchovy powder. Charred broccoli ($8) becomes a revelation served atop hummus made from pureed butternut squash, sneakily astonishing. The smoke theme first appears in a refined gloss on beer nuts: smoked cashews ($8) with rosemary and currants. The aptly named Ubiquitous Kale Salad ($8), last year's deathly dull menu cliche, becomes something creamy and sublime with fennel and pistachio dressing.

Pickled Verrill Farm corn pancakes ($12) are like maple-drizzled johnnycakes punched up with the capsicum bite and the fruitiness of fried shishitos: delectable. Mesquite tortellini ($13) looks small—five squat columns of house-made pasta filled with bianco sardo and grilled broccoli—but the fatty sharpness of Sardinian sheep cheese and the salty umami smack of colatura (modern Italy's answer to garum) adds up to a hefty few bites. Chicken-fried local rabbit ($14) might be the most original treatment of bunny I've seen in ages, and the most delicious: a batter-fried oblong of coarse rabbit pâté surrounded by celery, apple and blue cheese. The "secret" burger ($14) varies frequently, and mercifully stands out from today's surfeit of fancy burgers, its coarse grind balanced on one night by a crisp round of frico and salted onions.

Island Creek oyster gratin ($16) is a creamy leek stew with cubes of terrific, slightly funky guanciale and lovely uni-smeared toasts as croutons, but the subtlety of the oysters drowns in that richness. Pan-roasted clams ($16) with smoked pig's tail more skillfully balances the bivalve/pork tandem. House-made rye pasta ($15) is a powerhouse, with faintly tangy ribbon-edged pasta shells in a deep-flavored sauce of confit chicken thighs and crisp skin dressed in chicken liver/fig butter. Unapologetic grass-fed lamb flavor is evident in the cocoa-rubbed lamb sirloin ($17), while a brick of slow-roasted beef neck ($14) topped with radishes and nesting in parsnip puree is like braver-sounding short rib—tender, fatty and nap-inducing. A complex and entrancing hickory-smoked blood pudding ($12) might be the over-the-top apex of Scelfo's concentrated-flavor themes. Powerful smoke wrestles with the metallic whiff of the rice-thickened pork blood and sticky caramelized figs, accented by a bright walnut romesco.

The beverage program sets a usefully high standard for Harvard Square, with brilliant, inventive craft cocktails ($10-$12) like the Bell Tower ($12), a variant of the classic rye/Cognac Vieux Carré punched up with rosemary/ginger essence. Six draft beers ($6-$8) and 22 in bottles (mostly $5-$10) draw heavily from small local producers. Fourteen by-the-glass wines run $9-$13 and are well-suited to the robust food flavors. The bottle list of six sparklers ($40-$125), 16 whites ($33-$98) and 18 reds ($35-$120) favors Europe but sprinkles in some New World wines and prices them all attractively, from a $40 2012 Ulacia Txakoli, the bracing and fizzy Basque white, to a 2009 Daniel Rion "Les Beaux Monts" pinot noir, a steal of a first-growth burgundy at $120.

If Alden & Harlow has a soft spot, it's the choice to continue the menu's savory ferocity through dessert; smoked chocolate bread pudding ($9) can feel like too slight a variation on what preceded it. Instead, consider a cocktail like Hot Tiger's Milk ($10), made with rums, coconut, honey, bitters and cinnamon, like a Tiki toddy. With its hard surfaces and close-set tables, the dining room produces the kind of currently voguish roar that will make you shout at times. The relaxed, polished waitstaff does a fair job of helping patrons navigate a menu in which variability in dish size and richness can make over-ordering easy. My advice is to bring friends, go slow and try a few bites of many things. With a chef whose every carefully prepared, locally sourced dish has some flavor knob turned up to 11, Alden & Harlow favors the bold, but it helps if the bold know how to pace themselves. ◆

Q: I AM BLOND WITH LIGHT EYEBROWS AND I AM INTERESTED IN PERMANENT MAKE-UP, BUT I DON'T WANT TO LOOK FAKE OR OVERDONE; THOUGHTS??

A: I hear you; we have all seen eyebrows that look like they have been drawn on with a crayon in the wrong shape or color. Luckily, there are new techniques for semi-permanent makeup resulting in a totally natural look in shades that are perfect for individual hair and skin tones.

Other popular uses of permanent makeup are for upper or lower lid liner, and for adding natural lip color.

Permanent makeup is actually semi-permanent, in that it lasts up to 5 years, at which point you can have it touched up or let it fade away.

If you have light brows and lashes, are tired of applying make up, are active in sports, have allergies to ordinary makeup, wear contact lenses or glasses or are just too busy to worry about makeup, then permanent make up is a great option to consider!

THE STORY OF ()

LARS VON TRIER RETURNS WITH A PENETRATING PROVOCATION.

In the first moments of Lars von Trier's sprawling, explicit Nymph()maniac, Joe—played by Charlotte Gainsbourg, marking her third consecutive performance in a von Trier movie—is found bloodied and battered in a snowy back alley. She's discovered by Seligman (von Trier veteran Stellan Skarsgård), a bookish man of around 60 who offers to call for assistance. She won't have it, not when "a cup of tea, with milk" will do just fine. But why not involve the authorities?

"It's my own fault," she tells her helper, concluding that "I'm just a bad human being." As she recuperates in the kind stranger's bed during the two volumes' four hours and eight chapters, we listen to the world-weary Joe recount her story, vivified in flashbacks featuring newcomer Stacy Martin as a young Joe. But upon deeper viewing, Joe's erotic tale gradually reveals another portrait—one of von Trier himself, in a sly summation of the various stages of his career.

As she begins this multilayered story, Joe notices an angled hook hanging on Seligman's wall. "It's a fly," he tells her in the first of many digressive interruptions he'll make. An avid fisherman, Seligman informs her, "It's called a Nymph. It'll tie in elegantly with your discussion about nymphomania."

Joe, warmed by the tea and amused by Seligman's quirky curiosity, runs with it. "As quite a young nymph, it was imperative for me to get rid of my virginity."

Enter Shia LaBeouf. Tabloid fodder for months now, as accusations of artistic plagiarism have mounted against him and his numerous apologies just revealed even more plagiaries, he finally claimed a desire to retreat from the public spotlight. At Nymph()maniac's red-carpet premiere in Berlin, he wore a paper bag over his head; scrawled across it were the words "I am not famous anymore."

Perhaps not—but he may attain infamy, since he doesn't cover his head, or much of anything else, as Jerôme, the cad who deflowers the 15-year-old Joe, though a dubious disclaimer states that body doubles were employed. Jerôme reappears as the key figure throughout her tale, next as her employer (in a chapter recalling von Trier's The Boss of It All) and again during a dinner that finds Joe storing silverware in a rather personal place, as a mortified server looks on. (The waiter is played by von Trier regular Udo Kier, who memorably appeared in Just Jaeckin's The Story of O, a 1975 portrait of perversion that's likely a template for some of this film.) It's playful scenes like these that are in short supply during Nymph()maniac's second half, as plotting begins to trump characterization.

All of the filmmaker's movies are accounted for here, either through visual callbacks or direct quotations.

But what strong characters there are in this ensemble. As good as both Gainsbourg and Martin are as Joe, Christian Slater makes an indelible mark as Joe's accepting father, a doctor who understands her better than most. And then there's Uma Thurman, who's already seen one of her previous films cut into two volumes. The Kill Bill actress delivers one of this movie's most visceral performances, appearing as the scorned wife of one of Joe's countless, inconsequential lovers, a woman who carts her tow-headed young sons off to Joe's apartment to observe "Daddy's favorite place: the whoring bed!"

An even darker sequence set during the sixth chapter underlines the Danish jester's true ambition. Joe has gone off to feed her carnal desires, leaving her toddler alone in their high-rise apartment. As the cherubic child climbs out of his crib, playfully beckoned by the falling snow outside, Handel's "Lascia ch'io pianga" swells on the soundtrack; a sense of dread deepens as Joe's son dawdles toward the open window. More than an echo of the opening scene of Antichrist (Gainsbourg's debut von Trier film), it's a direct quotation.

Indeed, all of the filmmaker's movies are accounted for here, either through visual callbacks or direct quotations, and there's even a veiled acknowledgement of the incident that got the artist banned from the Cannes Film Festival, where he joked that he was a Nazi. This allusion occurs during Joe's recollection of an abortive tryst with African brothers she refers to as "negroes." Seligman deems this politically incorrect, and she bristles. "We elevate those who say right, but mean wrong, and mock those who say wrong, but mean right."

In this meta mode, von Trier even manages to touch upon the role of the movie critic, embodied by Seligman and his digressions. As the middle-aged bachelor continually draws story-stopping parallels to fishing, religion and intellectual pursuits like art and music, his bloviating ultimately does little to enlighten us about Joe, while clearly communicating the filmmaker's feelings toward his critics. And when von Trier reveals Seligman to be a lonely, sexless virgin... well, if I can dish it, I'd better be able to take it from an artist I respect.

And as Joe says to Seligman: "You can't make an omelet without breaking a few eggs." ◆

THAT'S WHO

A BERKLEE-BRED SINGER SCORES WITH EFFERVESCENT DANCE-POP—AND A LITTLE VIRAL BOOST.

ASPIRING MUSICIANS PLOT AND DREAM about going viral on YouTube, but Betty Who didn't have to lift a finger to generate 11 million hits of exposure. A gay couple from Utah just asked her manager if they could use her dance-pop anthem "Somebody Loves You" as the soundtrack to a flash-mob marriage proposal at a Home Depot.

"We didn't think it would be anything big," says Who, 22, who sang the song live at the couple's February wedding. "About 48 hours into the video being online, I remember seeing 2 million views, and my parents were calling me... counting."

Not that Betty Who—born Jessica Newham in Sydney, Australia—has been shy about plotting pop stardom. She put her mind to it as a freshman at Berklee, where she met fellow student Peter Thomas, now the producer and co-writer behind her two EPs, 2013's The Movement and major-label debut Slow Dancing, out April 8.

"My Berklee experience very much looked like me trying to get to where I am now," the 2013 graduate says. She and Thomas collaborated to coin her stage name, taken from the title of a tune she penned during high school. "There was a lot of 'What's the right step? What's the next step? What do I want to sound like, who do I want to look like, who do I want to be, and what's my message?' "

A big part of that was shaping the music. Who bubbles over with an affinity for pop music, from the Britney Spears and 'N Sync she embraced as a teenager to current sonic peers such as Katy Perry and Robyn. But when she first arrived in Boston after studying cello at a Michigan performing arts high school, Who was singing her originals in coffeehouses, accompanying herself on piano and guitar.

"I was writing singer/songwriter music akin to Joni Mitchell and Bob Dylan," she says. "And Peter was like, 'You're too happy and energetic, and you dance all the time—and that should be in your music! Your show shouldn't be you sitting on a stool singing about how your heart's been broken. There should be dancing. There should be light.' "

"I've always been driven by a feeling, something that moves me, and wanting to create something that moves other people."

BETTY WHO plays Brighton Music Hall on April 17.

Who and Thomas essentially envisioned the same thing in the aftermath of Whitney Houston's 2012 death, watching her videos. "We listened to a bunch of her music, and I was like, 'Man, I wish we could do something that had this much joy and light to it,' " Who says. That's when she wrote "Somebody Loves You," inspired by a breakup she had just gone through. "I'd been in this relationship with a person where I cared more the entire time," she says. "That's what that song is about: 'I am here, so pay attention or you're going to lose me.' "

Of course, lines like "If I am good to you, won't you be good to me" also clicked for Spencer Stout's lumber aisle proposal to boyfriend Dustin Reeser, especially when glazed in the infectious beats and keyboard/vocal layers of Betty Who.

Great mainstream pop tunes require an artful balance of energy, brightness and structure that can transform glossy production into memorable, heartfelt hooks. And Who expertly mines that formula with Thomas, whether in upbeat tracks like "Somebody Loves You," "High Society" and the new EP's effusive "Heartbreak Dream" or dreamier ballads like "Right Here" and the new "Alone Again."

"I've always been driven by a feeling, something that moves me, and wanting to create something that moves other people," Who says. "If you can make a song where one person is 'Oh my God, I feel so happy when I listen to [that song], or it made me cry, or it moved me to some extreme emotion,' you've done your job."

Now the New York-based singer is on tour to promote Slow Dancing, hitting Brighton Music Hall with her Berklee-trained band of bassist Jemila Dunham, keyboardist Lauren Fuller and drummer Derek Schurbon. "It's not like I'm on the road with a bunch of people I don't know," Who says. "These are the people who keep me going every day." ◆

LOST VEGAS

FOLLOWING IN HUNTER S. THOMPSON'S TIRE TRACKS

"THIS IS LIKE THE WORLD'S LARGEST collection of people I wouldn't want to sit down to dinner with," says my friend Andrew. He's a British photographer, and we're in Las Vegas for the Mint 400 off-road race, the event that spawned Hunter S. Thompson's Fear and Loathing in Las Vegas. Every writer who goes to Vegas wants to be Thompson, but my gonzo proclivities are hemmed in by two factors. One, I'll be driving a buggy in the race, and the wakeup call is at 4 am. Perhaps even more significantly, this is my third Vegas trip in six months. And if Thompson went to Vegas three times in six months, Fear and Loathing would've been all about the existential struggle of boarding in Group C on Southwest.

There's a certain trajectory for enthusiasm about Vegas. The first time you go, it's all euphoric expectation: We're going to Vegas! We're not sleeping all weekend yeeee-hawwww! Then, Vegas the second time: OK, I could go for some blackjack and a nice steak. Vegas the third time: Hey, do we really have to go to Vegas? You know, there are other places with nice pools but less stench of desperation.

Because of its proximity to the Mint registration, I stay at the D Casino Hotel downtown. The D is the kind of joint where the maid's daily punch list includes peeking under the mattress for corpses. I know I'm in a classy establishment from the moment I arrive at check-in and spy one of my fellow D guests ashing his cigarette on the floor and carrying his cell phone in a snazzy camouflage holster clipped to his jorts. Over at the casino, I momentarily think that the go-go dancers are making an ironic commentary on the normcore trend, but it turns out they're just dumpy. Eventually, I retreat to the quiet sophistication of the Golden Nugget.

Downtown Vegas is supposed to be making a comeback, and I suppose I might prefer its shabby glitz to the synthetic, overwrought carnival of the Strip, but that's sort of like saying that I suppose I prefer gonorrhea to syphilis. I do find one cool bar that has great food, a long beer list and a subtle wit to its decor. Naturally, it's always empty because nice things don't appeal to the shuffling, dead-eyed trolls out prowling the sidewalks of downtown Las Vegas.

They say Vegas makes for great people-watching, and that's especially true if you're a fan of The Walking Dead and want to see it in person. At around 10:30 am one morning, I watch a guy stagger past while dumping a bottle of water on his head. That might be normal if he just finished a marathon, but I'm pretty sure there aren't any marathons sponsored by meth. A short while later, I overhear a guy say, "I make a lot of money, but I spend more than I make. I got a couple bills coming up that I don't know how I'm gonna handle." Well, I'm no financial expert, but if you've got money problems, the first thing you should do is go to Vegas. One more overheard snippet features a corpulent Texan exclaiming, "They tried to give me a Corolla at the rental place. Can you imagine, me in a Corolla?" Dude, I can't imagine you in a library. But I can certainly imagine you in a Corolla.

Fortunately, my ultimate destination is not Vegas itself but the Mint 400 starting line, about 30 miles south. Our three-man team was assembled by Red Bull and also includes action-sports TV host Sal Masekela and Denver Broncos defensive end DeMarcus Ware, who I hope will love racing so much that he becomes a pro desert racer and abandons any plans he might have about leveling Tom Brady. Masekela and Ware split the first 100-mile lap, and I take over for the second one.

The D is the kind of joint where the maid's daily punch list includes peeking under the mattress for corpses.

Within the Las Vegas city limits, the edgy, debauched town described in Fear and Loathing is gone, replaced by corporate conferences at the Mandarin Oriental and prepackaged cruise-ship adventures for the hordes on the Strip. But at the Mint the peril is as real and immediate as it was in Thompson's day—less than 50 percent of the entrants even finish the race. When you're out in the scrubby, rock-strewn vastness of the desert, bounding along at 80 mph across the barest suggestion of a road, you get a different perspective on Vegas. Any city that supports an event where lunatics drive door-to-door at 130 mph across a dry lake—well, that place can't be all bad.

Still, when I pull around to hand the car back to Ware, we find that he's already split town. I can't say I blame him. ◆

SO MONEY, BABY: This is what counts as subtle sophistication in Las Vegas.

GOOD VIBES

THE GRAMMY WINNER RIFFS ON HIS TECHNIQUE, COMING OUT AND PISSING OFF MILES DAVIS.

PIONEERING JAZZ VIBRAPHONIST AND SEVEN-TIME GRAMMY winner Gary Burton, 71, is an alumnus and the former executive vice president of Berklee College of Music, where he also taught as a professor. His recently released autobiography, Learning to Listen: The Jazz Journey of Gary Burton, chronicles his life performing and interacting with such musical legends as Chick Corea (his longtime collaborator), Pat Metheny, Chet Atkins, Eric Clapton, Astor Piazzola and Stan Getz, as well as his coming out as a gay man relatively late in life. A native of rural Indiana, he now lives in Florida with his husband.

JONATHAN SOROFF: You've got seven Grammys. Where do you keep them all?
GARY BURTON: I have a shelf in the living room that they fit perfectly on. If I get an eighth one of these days, I'll have to remodel.

So why the vibraphone? That was my parents' fault. My parents wanted all three of us children to take music lessons. It was something my father, growing up in the Depression, had wanted to do, but never could. My older sister had piano lessons, and I started showing interest. The story was that I was in the other room while she was practicing, and I shouted out, "No, that's not an E-flat; it's an E-natural." My father looked around for an instrument in this town where we lived, and there was a lady who played the marimba and the vibraphone, and that was it.

How about the four-mallet technique? My teacher showed me how to hold the four sticks, and I just kept on doing it. I was playing alone, and it didn't sound complete. I was playing one melody line, and I wanted chords, harmony. So the four mallets was the way to do that. I had no idea that was rarely done or that I was pioneering something.

Your recording debut was with Chet Atkins. Where do you go from there? Well, where I lived was only a few hours' drive from Nashville, so I managed to connect down there. There was a saxophone player named Boots Randolph. He had a novelty record called "Yakety Sax," which, in fact, was used as the theme song to The Benny Hill Show. Anyway, I knew him from playing local clubs, and through him I connected with a guitarist. And the next thing I knew, I was 17, playing clubs and making a record. Chet Atkins heard me, and by the end of the summer, before I was supposed to be coming to school in Boston, I already had a record contract.

Favorite venue to perform in? Carnegie Hall. If you stand in the middle of that stage and play, you sound like a million dollars to yourself. It's really a sweet spot, acoustically. I have no idea what it's like in the audience.

Best jazz festival? My favorite is still the Newport Jazz Festival. Monterey is very good. And there are some good ones in Europe. But most of the big jazz festivals are too big. There's too much chaos, too many shows going on at the same time. There's something about Newport that's just so special.

One thing most jazz aficionados don't know, but should? I guess the misconception that jazz musicians are these struggling artists. That may have been true back in the '30s, '40s and '50s, but today, jazz musicians who have a following are successful and lead very settled lives. There's almost no drug use in the jazz world anymore. The old stereotype of the jazz musician living one gig to the next isn't true anymore.

I thought it was mandatory to do a lot of drugs to be a jazz musician. It seemed like it was, back in the '40s and the '50s. A lot of the top players were into heroin and cocaine and drinking. And because the big stars were doing it, the young players thought they should too. So there was a period when it was rampant. But something changed by the time my generation came along. I always thought maybe it was that rock music came along and took over the bad-boy image. But jazz kind of grew up. My generation came along, and we wanted nothing to do with it, because we'd seen what it had done to the guys who came before us.

Musician who intimidated you? Miles Davis. He threatened to kill me. I did an interview with a jazz critic, and my band was kind of considered to have started a new genre: fusion jazz, melding jazz with rock and roll. Anyway, I told the writer that as young musicians, we wanted to find our own voice instead of copying the guys who came before us. I said something like, "Not every trumpet player can play like Miles Davis." But what the critic wrote was "Miles Davis is old hat." I was mortified. The next week, I was working at a club in San Francisco, and Miles came in and was talking to the owner, who mentioned that we were playing there. Miles said, "If he ever mentions my name again, I'll kill him." I wrote him a note apologizing and left it in his hotel. I have no idea if he got it.

"Before I was supposed to be coming to school in Boston, I already had a record contract."

When you were on the faculty at Berklee, did a student ever call you on the fact that you never graduated? Not really. Berklee's always had a history of people coming and staying for as long as they need to. If you're at a professional level, you're being offered jobs. There are some students who are better players than their teachers.

Was it tough being gay in the jazz world? I expected it to be, but it wasn't. I think it might have been less welcoming when I started out, but by 1985, or whenever it was that I came out, it wasn't a big deal. I saw myself as a family guy. I was comfortable in both of my marriages, and they didn't end because I was having a gay relationship. I was just very confused and didn't really understand my sexuality. And when I did come out, I never had a negative experience. None of my musician friends or collaborators ever turned away. My career has reached new heights in the last 30 years.

Strangest use of your music that you know of? Well, it's been used for jingles. NPR uses jazz for interludes between segments. Not that it's odd. And I guess people do say odd things to me, like one man who said, "Your music got me through Vietnam." That was heavy. ◆

Boston's texting, tight-knit tough guys are on a quest to win back-to-back World Series.

T DIVISION

AFTER TWO MONTHS OF SPRING training, a six-month season and a monthlong march through the playoffs that culminated in the Red Sox's first World Series coronation on Fenway Park soil in 95 years, Kristi Gomes figured she had finally regained her husband's undivided attention.

If only she could pry the phone from his hands.

The first text messages began flying almost from the moment the duck boats were sheltered after the championship parade. The players had scattered, like birds migrating south for the winter, but nearly three-quarters of the Sox's roster was engaged in daily dialogue via a chain of texts that everyone agrees was likely instigated by Jonny Gomes, the outfielder who might as well have a Ph.D. in team chemistry. The chatter, most of which is not fit for print, ranged from workout advice and encouragement to hot-stove gossip and trash talk.

Gomes shared pictures of the new tattoo that branded the right side of his torso and served as his most permanent memento from the 2013 season. A few days after Christmas, motor-mouthed second baseman Dustin Pedroia urged, "OK, go run it off! Keep working!" And everyone begged slugging first baseman Mike Napoli to simply sign a new contract already and end the suspense of his free agency.

"It was every f---ing day, all day," Jonny Gomes says of the texts. "Any time some guy signed somewhere else, any time someone got traded, advice, invites here and there, checking in with each other, wishing 'Merry Christmas,' 'Happy New Year,' it was like a friggin' frat house. I mean, I don't think there's one person's wife who wasn't sick of it."

And if there are a few reasons to believe the Red Sox can become the first team this century to win back-to-back World Series, those messages—and what they represent—might be the biggest.

IT DOESN'T SOUND like much, teammates staying in touch during the offseason, but Gomes had never seen anything like it.

A veteran of 11 big league seasons spent with five teams, Gomes has hundreds of former teammates and friends in the game, many of whom work out at the same training facility in Scottsdale, Ariz. In baseball, everyone knows everyone, so much so that journeyman infielder Brent Lillibridge (briefly a member of the Red Sox in 2012) once memorably dubbed the majors "a sorority of guys." Loyalties can be fleeting, especially with mercenary free agents hopping from team to team, but Gomes still shakes his head whenever he bumps into a player who doesn't have the first clue what any of his teammates are up to.

"I'll talk to a guy and be like, 'Hey, how's so-and-so?'" Gomes says. "And they're like, 'I don't know.' I'm like, 'You don't know? That's the guy who hits behind you. You've got no idea?' It happens all the time. But we were like, literally, 15 guys deep [on the text chain]. I wrote a few times, 'Don't take this for granted. This s--- does NOT happen.'"

Gomes was referring to the bond that has developed in the Red Sox's clubhouse during the past year. After the beer-and-chicken flap that symbolized the historic collapse of September 2011 and ushered in a miserable 2012 season—one that featured a disconnect between ownership and the front office, as well as a player mutiny against out-of-touch manager Bobby Valentine—the team needed an attitude adjustment. The Sox hired even-keeled manager John Farrell and signed free agents Gomes, Napoli, catcher David Ross, pitcher Ryan Dempster and right fielder Shane Victorino, all of whom are known for their character and baseball IQ as much as their physical talent.

In a matter of months, the Sox morphed from Animal House into Band of Brothers. They grew bushy, runaway beards to mimic Gomes, wore American-flag boxer shorts in the locker room and organized team meals on the road, a routine that began on the night of April 15, when two dozen players showed up for an impromptu steak dinner at Morton's in Cleveland to discuss how they could help after the Boston Marathon bombings.

"It's just a bunch of guys that love the game. That's the culture of this team."

Although the bombings may have accelerated the bonding process, these Red Sox didn't need an overwhelming sense of civic duty as an excuse to grow close. They liked talking baseball almost as much as they enjoyed one another's company. So as Farrell and his coaching staff focused on each day's game and stressed attention to detail in compiling scouting reports that were thicker than War and Peace, the players lapped it up, spending hours scanning video or talking shop in the batting cage. There was a pervading sense of accountability; nobody wanted to let his teammates down.

"Guys would be like, 'Hey, let's go meet in so-and-so's room tonight. We'll hang out and talk baseball,'" Victorino says. "It's just a bunch of guys that love the game. That's the culture of this team."

Owner John Henry's internal projections suggested a win total in the 80s, but the players were more ambitious. On their first day as teammates in spring training, Dempster casually asked Gomes how he was doing. "Just another day closer to the parade," Gomes said, and he wasn't kidding. The rejoinder became popular among teammates en route to 97 regular-season wins, an AL East title and, sure enough, the Red Sox's third World Series championship in 10 years.

Perhaps the best measure of the Sox's astounding consistency: They never lost more than three games in a row.

Jake Peavy saw it right away. The veteran pitcher was acquired in a July 30 trade with the Chicago White Sox; a few weeks later, Gomes saw a picture of Peavy's 5,000-acre ranch, "Southern Falls," along the Alabama River. "When we win the World Series," Gomes said, "you've got to buy the duck boat you rode on and bring it [home] with you."

"He's talking about a World Series parade. They all were," Peavy says. "It's August, and they're talking about it like it's going to happen. It was crazy. To be traded into that atmosphere and have a chance to play with those guys, and such a special group, it was a dream come true. It doesn't happen very often."

IT'S EQUALLY RARE for teams to win back-to-back championships.

It used to happen all the time. The New York Yankees won five World Series in a row from 1949 to '53, and even in the decade after expansion, the Oakland Athletics captured three straight from 1972 to '74, Cincinnati's "Big Red Machine" won in 1975 and '76, and the Yankees overcame their "Bronx Zoo" infighting to win in 1977 and '78.

But since then there have been only two championship streaks. The Toronto Blue Jays won back-to-back crowns in 1992 and '93, and the Joe Torre-guided Yankees reached dynastic heights with four World Series titles in five seasons, including three in a row from 1998 to 2000. In the past 20 years, the only other organizations to even reach the World Series in back-to-back years were the 1995-96 Atlanta Braves, the 2008-09 Philadelphia Phillies and the 2010-11 Texas Rangers. Six of the past 11 World Series champs missed the playoffs entirely, one season after popping champagne. It's no wonder Pedroia calls repeating "the toughest thing to do in sports."

The odds are stacked against the 2014 Red Sox before they even play a game.

GROUP CHAT:
The Red Sox players are never more than a text away from one another.

The Sox came tantalizingly close to back-to-back World Series appearances a few years ago. After sweeping the Colorado Rockies to win the 2007 World Series, they returned to the AL Championship Series in 2008 and took the Tampa Bay Rays to a do-or-die Game 7 before dropping a 3-1 nail-biter that Pedroia still recalls as "a huge letdown."

"Shoot, I think we were four, five innings away, winning in the fourth or fifth," says Pedroia, the Sox's de facto captain. "You don't want that feeling. Once you win, you want to stay there and be on top all the time."

The era of free agency, which began in the mid-1970s, has only increased the challenge of defending a title, and with shortstop Stephen Drew, catcher Jarrod Saltalamacchia and, most significantly, center fielder Jacoby Ellsbury not returning from the championship roster, the Red Sox aren't immune to that reality.

Although there's confidence from the organization that young third baseman Will Middlebrooks and prized 21-year-old shortstop Xander Bogaerts will be able to pick up some of the offensive slack, Ellsbury's defection to the rival Yankees leaves a void atop the batting order and uncertainty as to whether rookie Jackie Bradley Jr. or injury reclamation project Grady Sizemore will succeed in center field.

But while the Red Sox don't look as good on paper as they did six months ago, they prefer to read from their phones anyway. And whenever a player on the offseason text chain brought up last year's success, he was inundated with an off-color rallying cry that caught on so fast that Gomes had it printed on the front of T-shirts that were worn in the locker room during spring training: "Turn the f---in' page."

"That's been a slogan of ours in the text messages we exchanged with the guys—hey, let's turn the page; it's a new year," Peavy says. "It's 2014. We haven't done anything."

EVERY SEASON PRESENTS unique challenges. Save for the shoulder strain that sidelined pitcher Clay Buchholz for three months, and various maladies that ailed relief pitchers, the Red Sox stayed remarkably free of long-term injuries last year. They also avoided a potential crisis when Koji Uehara emerged from the bullpen ranks to become as dominant as any closer in history.

Odds are, they won't be so lucky again.

But Victorino, the strong-armed right fielder from Hawaii, suggested the Sox have developed a winning culture that will help them overcome whatever adversity awaits. He came within two wins of repeating with a Phillies team that possessed similar clubhouse harmony centered on a core group of players who were in the prime of their careers. When he looks at Pedroia, David Ortiz, Buchholz and ace lefty Jon Lester, he sees 2008-09 Phillies cornerstones Chase Utley, Ryan Howard, Jimmy Rollins and Cole Hamels.

"In Philly, no matter who we got—if it was a Cy Young winner, someone at the trade deadline—when they came into the clubhouse it was one idea, one identity," Victorino says. "Same here. No matter if you're Jake Peavy with 12 years in the big leagues or a rookie like Xander Bogaerts who's a young phenom, we're all checking that at the door. It's easy to buy into what we've got here.

"There's a lot that goes into [repeating]—injuries, keeping everybody healthy, guys doing exactly what they did the year before. But if there's one team that I'm confident has the exact ingredient and the exact chemistry that you need to do it, it's this team."

And so, while the Red Sox turn the page, as their chain of texts demands, they must take care not to go too far. After all, if they're going to achieve the rarity of the repeat, they will need to rely on their greatest resource—the chemistry forged last year. ◆

FIELDING QUESTIONS

Everything you wanted to know but were afraid to ask about the 2014 Red Sox.

BY

PHOTOGRAPHED BY MICHAEL IVINS/ BOSTON RED SOX

LIKE THE BLOOMING OF THE hydrangeas or the return of the red-bellied beer swiller to the sands of Wollaston Beach, spring wouldn't be spring without some bizarre Red Sox drama. And, per usual, there's been plenty. Consider catching prospect Jon Denney, who might make the lineup this year—a police lineup, that is. Denney kept the Sox's spring training arrest streak alive by getting pulled over twice in the same night. The second encounter brought out the cuffs, at which point Denney informed the police how rich he is. Because cops love to hear that from a 19-year-old.

Moving on from Denney's Moons Over My Hammy Jailhouse Breakfast, the Red Sox also had a swarm of bees delay a spring training game with the Yankees. New York first baseman Mark Teixeira brought out two bottles of honey and suggested using it to lure the bees out to the parking lot. We strongly encourage all Red Sox fans to implement this information in a Teixeira chant, perhaps referencing Winnie the Pooh or Honey Boo Boo.

And don't forget that Jake Peavy was injured when he slashed his finger with a giant knife while cutting the packaging on a pair of new fishing rods. Making matters worse, he then went fishing instead of to the doctor. As the saying goes: Give a man a fish and he'll eat for a day, but teach a man to fish and he'll miss three days with a gnarly finger laceration.

So, an arrest, swarms of bees, a freak knife accident—it must be time for another Red Sox season! Let's assess the good, the bad and the frankly unknowable by answering 10 important questions about the 2014 Boston Red Sox.

We won the World Series. Does that mean we're the favorites?

Vegas doesn't think so, with most bookies ranking the Sox's chances behind those of the Dodgers, the Tigers, the Nationals and the Cardinals—and nearly even with the Yanks and the Rays. (The Yankees' odds improved conspicuously when they signed Masahiro "Hopefully Not Dice-K Part II" Tanaka for $155 million.) This should come as good news for Boston fans, since an element of national skepticism seems essential to Red Sox fortunes. They may have clinched three titles in the past decade, but they still function better with an underdog mentality. And by the way, if you wagered a million dollars last spring on the 2013 Red Sox winning the World Series, you'd have won $35 million. Too bad you didn't do that.

But why would anyone doubt our awesomeness?

Well, losing Jacoby Ellsbury might have something to do with it. Last December, I was walking through Kenmore Square when a Fox 25 cameraman stopped me on the sidewalk to ask what I thought about Ellsbury going to the Yankees. I said something about the precedent from 2012 to 2013—losing three big names and subsequently winning the World Series—and how history shows the Sox don't need to get overly invested in a single player. And while I genuinely believe my own sound bite, it still hurts to lose Ellsbury. The upshot, I suppose, is that given his propensity for injury, the Sox are already accustomed to playing without him.

So who's playing center?

The happy surprise in this dilemma is the unexpectedly wonderful play from Grady Sizemore, whom we expected to be about as relevant as Grady Little (or Tom Sizemore). But clearly, the center field duties will be handled exclusively by hot young star Jackie Bradley Jr. That is, unless Sizemore somehow locks it up and Bradley is sent to Pawtucket. Of course, the two of them could also platoon, with the Sox grooming Bradley while moderating Sizemore's day-to-day workload. One of those options will almost definitely play out—of this we are certain. But the Sizemore situation just goes to show that taking a flier on an injury-prone old guy can work out really well. Which brings us to...

How about that John Lackey and the rest of the starting rotation?

Returning from Tommy John surgery is a fraught process—some guys regain their form, but many others never manage to revive their careers. John Lackey turned out to belong to the former group, as underscored by his masterful outdueling of Justin Verlander in the Sox's crucial 1-0 win in Game 3 of the ALCS. Even finer for Lackey, some folks think the second year after the surgery can go even better than the first (this, apparently, is the word on the Tommy John street).

The rest of the news on the Red Sox rotation is that there isn't much news. And that's great. There have been years when the team might know the first two starters and everything else is up for grabs, which can lead to uneven performances—starters seem to thrive on routine. This year, the rotation looks like Jon Lester, Clay Buchholz, Lackey, Peavy and Felix Doubront. Given Ryan Dempster's unexpected retirement, it's possible that Chris Capuano could get in the mix for the five-spot, but for the most part there's a dearth of controversy.

And for that, we can at least partially thank Dr. Frank Jobe, who brought Tommy John surgery to baseball and just died this spring. We hereby propose an Official Salute to Frank Jobe at Fenway. Capuano can celebrate it on consecutive days—he's had Tommy John surgery twice.

Who's behind the plate?

While the starters on the mound seem all but locked in, there might be a varied cast on the other side of those pitches, as there's no shoo-in to preside over hallowed ground once owned by the A-Rod-smashing mitt of Jason Varitek. We've got A.J. Pierzynski, who fits nicely in the Varitek model of catchers who are not afraid to incorporate their fists and/or faces in on-field disputes. (During his time with the White Sox, the team created an All-Star promotion encouraging fans to "Punch A.J.") There's David Ross, Ryan Lavarnway, Christian Vazquez and Dan Butler. Who emerges as the most popular day-to-day option might depend more on rapport with pitchers and the nebulous concept of game management than on offensive stats. We'll miss Salty, but backstop is one position where the Red Sox have a lot of good options.

Can Papi remain Papi?

To anyone who hates the concept of the designated hitter, we challenge you to look at David Ortiz and tell him he can't play. Just look him right in the eye and tell him he has to either field a position or retire. You can't do it, can you? Thanks to the DH, the Red Sox still have their 2004-era title talisman, their mascot, their fearsome power-hitting clubhouse glue. He may slump, for sure—he's had a horrible spring training while angling for a contract extension he finally got—but given Ortiz's track record, you know he's always going to come back around. He's still the guy other teams shudder to see striding to the plate in crucial situations, waggling his bat and taking those massive cuts that have a way of lasering the pitch back into the bullpen. You know the phrase "Act like you've been there"? Well, Papi's been there, he acts like it and he's a key reason the 2014 Red Sox have an excellent chance of playing baseball in October.

We have a closer! Right?

Well, probably. Last year Koji Uehara took over closing duties in June and subsequently emerged as the most lights-out finisher in the league. His WHIP stat (walks plus hits per inning pitched) was 0.57, which is the lowest in major league history. But closers are all about catching lightning in a bottle, and success one year is no guarantee of future performance. Fortunately, Uehara only had four months as the closer, so hopefully he can pick up where he left off. But if we get to August and Edward Mujica or Junichi Tazawa or Brandon Workman has emerged as the new go-to guy, don't fret. As Uehara himself proves, sometimes the secret weapon is the best weapon of all.

Are we strong at shortstop?

It looks like Xander Bogaerts could mature into a fantastic shortstop, but he's still green. While we certainly hope that Bogaerts develops into the Sox's first long-term shortstop since Nomar, in the meantime there's still the distraction of the unsigned Stephen Drew. Luckily, we have a solution: First we tell Drew that his agent Scott Boras requested a meeting, and then we trick him into walking into an "office" that is really a shipping container on a cargo vessel bound for Japan. To thicken the plot, Manny Ramirez will be in there waiting for a meeting too. After a week at sea, Manny will remark, "Man, Nomar, this is a strange cruise ship." None of this will resolve the situation, but it will be a great way to take the heat off Bogaerts if he has an early slump.

Are the important beards back?

Winning a title is sweet enough, but the Red Sox get bonus points for doing it while rocking a look that George Steinbrenner would've hated. If nasty facial hair correlates to postseason success, then warm up the duck boats, because the Sox's most hirsute bunch is back to win games, take names and make the Duck Dynasty guys look like Justin Bieber. Mike Napoli, Dustin Pedroia and Shane Victorino all return, providing a crucial thread of continuity with the championship crew. General manager Ben Cherington knows you can't expect to bring back the exact team that won a title, but re-signing Napoli was a key move.

Is greatness the new normal?

We'd like to think so, but the post-2007 years spent wandering the wilderness prove how injuries and free-agent miscalculations can utterly torpedo a formerly competitive team. Freshly minted championship aside, it would be foolish to think that the Red Sox are suddenly immune to the forces that so very recently dropped them to last place. But the Cherington regime seems to embrace a certain philosophic adaptability that bodes well for long-term success—Cherington will blow up a team when necessary (see: Josh Beckett and friends), but he'll also spend the money to keep the guys he deems crucial. He's not playing Yankees-style acquisition by brute force, and he's not exactly going the Moneyball route either. If anything, Cherington appears to embrace a Belichick-style gimlet eye toward his team's needs and his available resources. That means practicing patience with younger players like Bogaerts and Bradley rather than gutting the farm system to grab the free agent du jour. And it means sometimes letting popular players like Ellsbury walk. It's hard to know which signing—or lack of signing—will haunt you, but for 2014 Cherington basically adhered to the notion that you don't mess with success. Was that the right call? Head on down to Yawkey Way, because we're about to find out. ◆

METRO BOSTON'S AMPED-UP GUIDE TO ENTERTAINMENT, CULTURE AND BAND-ON-BAND AGGRESSION

AGENDA for 4/2-4/15

For Those About to Rock...

We salute you.

TO CALL THE ROCK 'N' ROLL Rumble a mere "battle of the bands" would be like referring to the Olympics as a glorified "field day." The annual throwdown for sonic supremacy is both mutual lovefest and all-out war, and to the victor go the spoils — namely, bragging rights worth a neekful of gold medals. Sponsored by WZLX's Boston Emissions, the 35th annual Rumble's 24-band bill is stacked with local talent, including indie fixtures Guillermo Sexo, free-wheelin' Americana jammers Tigerman WOAH, jangly guitar-driven rockers Airport and many more. As usual, it all goes down in this area's unoffieial music capital, Central Square, at T.T. the Bear's. It kicks off with the first of six preliminary rounds on April 6 and rages on all month. Let's get ready to rumble. / Alexandra Cavallo

BEAUTY IN RUINS Even in the Eternal City, living "la dolee vita" has to come to an end. Such is the ease for onetime novelist and serial playboy Jep Gambardella in The Great Beauty. The Roman hedonist's life of exeess starts to crumble when Gambardella learns about the death of an old girlfriend on his 65th birthday, prompting him to reflect on his debaucherous party years. The most recent winner of Best Foreign Language Film at the Oscars and Golden Globes, The Great Beauty juxtaposes pulsating danee seenes against the eity's ancient ruins. Catch it in a double feature with the film that inspired it, Federieo Fellini's La Dolce Vita, on April 13 at the Brattle Theatre. / Hannah Weintraub

3 Days to Kill ★★ Right before CIA hit man Ethan Renner blows away a coterie of Euro goons, he's on the phone, singing "Happy Birthday" to his estranged daughter. As the call is cut short by gunfire and explosions, you half expect him to spout off bon mots like "I'm getting too old for this shit." Instead, he coughs and wheezes, and the mucus from his runny nose turns crimson as he mutters, "This cold's killin' me." Turns out, Renner's got brain cancer. "I suggest you get your affairs in ordcr," says a helpful doc. Thus begins the latest of writer Luc Besson's Paris-set action flicks. Somewhat surprisingly, it doesn't star Liam Neeson, who, at 61, might actually be getting too old for this shit. In his place, 59-year-old Kevin Costner wryly fills the bill, getting a free pass to look winded while chasing Movic Terrorists. In a formula that's rapidly bccoming rote, Besson recyclcs his go-to theme of balancing work with family, while director McG stages the mayhem in exactly the manner you'd cxpect of an adult who calls himself "McG." / Brett Michel (At Boston Common and in the suburbs.)

12 Years a Slave ★★★★ Despite being adapted by screenwritcr John Ridley from Solomon Northup's own 1853 memoir, the astonishing 12 Years a Slave is not the story of one man's struggle. This is not a triumph of the human spirit over adversity. It is an autopsy of a systemic pathology that poisoned a nation, laid bare once and for all by a filmmaker without a sentimental bone in his body. We have seen movies about the horrors of slavery before. But this one is about the mechanics. It is about process. Director Steve McQueen actually downplays the brutality of plantation life, all things considered. 12 Years a Slave merely asks you to meet its level gaze and accept the fact that all this actually happened. Sure, Northup got back home eventually—the title itself is a big honking spoiler. But what of the countless others who were not born in the right place at the right time? What of this crucl and brutal machine that kept grinding along for years afterward? Don't look away. / Sean Burns (At Boston Common and in the suburbs.)

300: Rise of an Empire ★ ½ Did I ever expect thc day would comc when I'd miss Zack Snyder? Not to worry: We haven't reached that point yct, but this continuation of 300, his homoerotic frat-bait, is a film that docs makc me miss Gerard Butler, star of many tcrrible movics. Compared to Butlcr's digital-scenery-devouring King Leonidas in 2006's original, relative newcomer Sullivan Stapleton (Animal Kingdom) is actually understated, almost delivering a real performance as Greek general Themistokles, despite the broad speechifying that passes for his dialogue. Which is to say, he's overthought his role. The movie is based on Frank Miller's graphic novel Xerxes, so you'd expect that director Noam Murro would focus on Rodrigo Santoro's mortal-turned-god—but then you'd be doing the overthinking. Thankfully though, Santoro's golden-skinned giant shrinks before the might of Artemisia (Eva Green), commander of the Persian navy. Murro's bloody spectacle is a mess, part prequel, part sequel and mostly unnecessary—except for Green, whose 3-D nudity will have the college Greeks lining up in grateful servitude. / Brett Michel (At Boston Common, Fenway, Somerville and in the suburbs.)

Bad Words ★★★ Not content playing the nice guy, Jason Bateman casts himself as a brilliant schmuck in this acidic comedy, his directorial debut. He plays Guy Trilby, a 40-year-old loner and merciless hijacker of children's spelling bees, at which every parent of the "pre-masturbators" wants him dead. He verbally and mentally abuses everyone on his path to the championship, even Jenny Widgeon (Kathryn Hahn), who nevertheless senses something inside Trilby. Sure, it might simply be bile, but he requires a media sponsor, and she's a reporter in need of a story. Bad Words is Andrew Dodge's first produced screenplay, and he isn't joking around with that title—or his commitment to debauched comedy. Take Trilby's unlikely bond with awkward 10-year-old finalist Chaitanya Chopra (Rohan Chand)—aka "Slumdog"—who remains unfazed even as Trilby introduces his competitor to smoking, shoplifting, drinking and streetwalkers. What's this all building to? I won't say, but I will direct you to the tagline on the film's poster: "The end justifies the mean." And how. / Brett Michel (At Boston Common, Fenway and Kendall Square.)

Divergent ★½ If you're looking for a satisfying screen reunion of the talented leads of The Spectacular Now (Shailene Woodley and Miles Teller), move along. Here, Teller's a spectacular dick to Woodley, and he remains on the sidelines in the dystopian Chicago of director Neil Burger's boilerplate adaptation of Veronica Roth's young-adult novel. Society has been divided into easily digestible, post-apocalyptic factions: Erudite the intelligent, Abnegation the selfless, Amity the peaceful, Candor the honest and Dauntless the brave. Tris (Woodley) is Abnegation-born, but she's reached the age when an aptitude test will determine whether she's better suited to another faction. Turns out, she's secretly Divergent, a fit for multiple factions (or none), which makes her a threat to Jeanine (Kate Winslet), coup-crazy leader of the Erudite. Our heroine eventually falls for Four (Theo James), part of Radioactive the hot. OK, this last one isn't really a faction—although, absurdly, James' character really is named Four. Nevertheless, teens will find the Brit attractive, more so than Ansel Elgort, soon to be seen snogging Woodley in The Fault in Our Stars, who plays her brother here. Now that is divergent. / Brett Michel (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

The Grand Budapest Hotel ★★★½ Wes Anderson's latest confection is a sprawling valentine to a place that never was, an Eastern Europe nestled between the two world wars. Sixteen-year-old Zero Moustafa (newcomer Tony Revolori), the newly minted lobby boy at the titular mountainside retreat, becomes the most trusted friend and companion to M. Gustave (Ralph Fiennes in a gloriously profane performance). Fiennes plays the dandy, "liberally perfumed" concierge for the famed hotel, a physical creation that ranks with The Royal Tenenbaums' townhouse as a believably lived-in space of the imagination. The lightning-paced story encompasses the murder of a dowager (Tilda Swinton), the theft of a fictional Renaissance painting, more murders and the most impressive cast you're likely to encounter in cinemas all year. There are too many stars to list, but I must note that Anderson's priceless returning repertory players Bill Murray and Bob Balaban have even less to do here than they did in George Clooney's The Monuments Men, which seems downright criminal. But then, I'm greedy. When a film contains such ornate riches, you simply want more. / Brett Michel (At Boston Common, Fenway, Kendall Square, Coolidge Corner and in the suburbs.)

Jodorowsky's Dune ★★★½ In 1975, Chilean director Alejandro Jodorowsky announced his intention to adapt Frank Herbert's science fiction novel Dune—despite the small detail of his never having read it. Thus begins Frank Pavich's enthralling documentary, a chronicle of the (un-)making of one of the greatest movies never made. "Jodo" dreamed of giving audiences a "sacred experience" —mimicking the effects of LSD, without the actual intake—so just imagine the films we'd be watching today if Dune had become the influential blockbuster of our time, rather than Star Wars. Set to star Jodo's 12-year-old son, Brontis, alongside Orson Welles, Mick Jagger, David Carradine and Salvador Dali, with music by Pink Floyd and designs by H.R. Giger and Jean "Moebius" Giraud (who later funneled their talents into Ridley Scott's Alien), this Dune only exists as a massive volume of storyboards. They're glorious. An adaptation of Dune was eventually filmed; Jodo said it gave him "a pain in my heart, because if anyone can do it, it's David Lynch." Then, he saw Lynch's disastrous failure—with unexpected glee. Now, see what might have been, and still may be. / Brett Michel (At Kendall Square.)

Mr. Peabody & Sherman ★★ Another cartoon you grew up with gets the overblown, 3-D, CGI treatment, as the "Peabody's Improbable History" segment from Rocky and His Friends and The Bullwinkle Show trips through time into 2014. Director Rob Minkoff (The Lion King) updates the cartoon classic that featured a Nobel-winning talking beagle and his "pet boy"—and it's for the dogs. As bad as that pun is, there are worse ones in this film, which I concede is appropriate, since the 5-minute-long TV adventures created by the late Ted Key dealt them like cards. Alas, little of the dry wit from Mr. Peabody and Sherman's original journeys into the past remains, replaced by a screenplay that makes the common franchise-building fumble of focusing on an origin story. Ty Burrell does a serviceable job voicing Peabody, but not casting, say, John Hodgman or David Hyde Pierce to recreate Bill Scott's vintage vocal performance seems like just one of many missed opportunities.

If only there really were a WABAC machine, then maybe someone could go back and fix this mutt of a movie. / Brett Michel (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Muppets Most Wanted ★★★ "We're doing a sequel," sing the Muppets at the start of their new movie. James Bobin returns to direct Kermit, Miss Piggy, Gonzo and Fozzie for a second go-round, and he's canny enough about the self-deprecating charms of the childhood favorites to have the gang continue crooning about how sequels are "never as good." Maybe so, but this eighth film to headline Jim Henson's critters is still silly fun. Prodded by their new manager, Dominic Badguy (Ricky Gervais), they decide to tour Europe, boarding a train bound from L.A. to Berlin (just go with it). Once there, hecklers Statler and Waldorf read a poster announcing the performance. "Die Muppets? Looks like they've put up our reviews early!" Tina Fey and Ty Burrell co-star, as the Muppets unwittingly become entangled in an international crime caper spearheaded by Constantine, the "world's most dangerous frog"—and Kermit's doppelganger. As the song goes, this isn't quite as good as the last one, but that one didn't have Danny Trejo and Ray Liotta singing and dancing in a Boyz II Men prison number. / Brett Michel (At Boston Common, Fenway, Somerville and in the suburbs.)

Need for Speed ★ Barely 10 minutes into this adaptation of the eponymous video game, director Scott Waugh posits his cast at a drive-in theater that's showing 1968's Bullitt. And not just any scene, but Steve McQueen's famed high-speed chase through the streets of San Francisco in a modified Ford Mustang. Way to set an impossibly high bar for yourself, Waugh.

ALONG FOR THE RIDE Mr. Peabody & Sherman, featuring Ty Burrell, follows a time-traveling dog and his "pet boy."

Breaking Bad's Aaron Paul plays Tobey Marshall, a mechanic/street racer tapped by Dino Brewster (Dominic Cooper)—a slimeball who's also sleeping with Tobey's ex—to rebuild a mythical Shelby Mustang, which promises to pay our grease monkey protagonist enough to save the family-run garage. Sounds good, until Marshall is framed for both vehicular manslaughter and the theft of two supercars. It's more Grand Theft Auto than Need for Speed, and Paul looks so constipated behind the wheel on his revenge-fueled race across the country that it's no wonder he can't supply the film with any real gas. / Brett Michel (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Non-Stop ★★½ "The TSA!" bellows the co-pilot of a transatlantic flight gone horribly wrong. "They gave a paranoid alcoholic a gun and a badge, and they put him on my plane! Jesus!" No, the son of God isn't on this jetliner; it's just Liam Neeson, reliably springing into action, yet again, in this latest thriller from Jaume Collet-Serra (director of Neeson's Unknown and the ridiculous adoption chiller Orphan). Certainly, air marshal Bill Marks is a drunk: The image of him swirling whiskey in a well-worn paper cup with a toothbrush, while seated behind the wheel of his car, before stumbling into LaGuardia says more about him than the quote above. But he still has every right to be paranoid, since someone begins sending him threatening text messages moments after lifting off from New York, bound for London. The mystery man or woman is demanding that our hungover hero transfer $150 million into an off-shore account, lest a passenger be executed every 20 minutes. It's like one of Agatha Christie's taut, locked-room mysteries, until 9/11 enters the plot. Too. Soon. / Brett Michel (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

THE RAID 2 ★★★½ I unfairly dismissed Gareth Evans' Jakarta-set The Raid: Redemption, frustrated by what I considered to be subpar presentation of spectacular fight choreography. Now, I can finally see what was once a shaky blur—and the brutal punching, bone breaking, neck stabbing and all-around ass kicking that propels Evans' sequel is a bloody eye-opener, defying all but the most squeamish to try to look away. Even though the onscreen subtitles lagged four seconds behind the spoken dialogue at the screening (I'm assured that readers will be treated to perfectly timed captions), the action was so spectacular that the mental gymnastics required to keep track of conversations mattered little; the actors' physical gymnastics said far more. The reintroduction of rookie cop Rama (Iko Uwais)—now deep undercover—leads to prison brawls, warehouse fights, club clashes, the introductions of Baseball Bat Man and Hammer Girl and a car chase that absolutely shames the supposedly faster, more furious efforts of Hollywood. Then you realize there's still a half-hour left in this genre mashup, an Indonesian Infernal Affairs with a Yakuza picture bleeding out of its glorious gut. / Brett Michel (At Kendall Square.)

TIM'S VERMEER ★★½ Magicians Penn and Teller have spent a career playfully twisting and debunking aspects of their act, in recent years taking a similar approach to the wider culture as well, à la their pointedly titled television show Bullshit!. This initially engrossing but ultimately thin documentary, directed by Teller, may have been better suited for a TV segment. The Tim of the title is Tim Jenison, an inventor and tech whiz who made millions in the video industry. Obsessed with the idea that Dutch master Johannes Vermeer was using optics to create his unparalleled portraits, Tim rigs up a mirrored contraption based on 17th-century camera obscura equipment and sets about painting his own replica of The Music Lesson. Like most Penn and Teller projects, Tim's Vermeer shows you the trickery behind the trick and leaves you astounded all the same. There are some fascinating ideas here about the arbitrary line drawn by historians between invention and artistry, but even at 80 minutes the film feels distended and dragged out. / Sean Burns (At Kendall Square, Coolidge Corner, West Newton and in the suburbs.)

THE WIND RISES ★★★½ Master animator Hayao Miyazaki has announced this will be his final film, and it's quite the departure from his fantasy tales. A relatively straightforward biopic of aeronautical engineer Jiro Horikoshi, The Wind Rises doubles as a lyrical, doom-laden portrait of a country on the precipice of disaster, and a sad meditation on the role of an artist during wartime. Nearsighted Jiro is obsessed with aviation but unfit to fly, channeling his passion into designing planes. As Japan gears up for World War II, the movie sinks into a melancholy groove, admiring Jiro's spirited innovations while dreading the inevitable outcome. It works in a slower, sadder register than most contemporary pictures, dwelling on small moments of beauty with an apocalypse on the horizon. As with most Miyazaki movies, Disney has prepared an English language dub for American theaters. I'm not sure it was necessary this time, as this mournful tale is decidedly not for children. The dubbed version does, however, boast Werner Herzog as a sly, mysterious German, so kudos on the voice casting. / Sean Burns (At Boston Common, Kendall Square, Coolidge Corner, Somerville and in the suburbs.)

MUSIC

Edited by Sarah Hagman

SOUND WITH VISION New Orleans-bred, Juilliard-trained pianist and vocalist Jon Batiste serves as the artistic director at large for Harlem's National Jazz Museum, but that isn't his only outlet for musical outreach. With his band, Stay Human, Batiste brings jazz to the streets and subways of New York, staging impromptu performances they call "Love Riots." The goal: to encourage deeper appreciation of music and connection with one another. That same spirit drives their first full-length album, Social Music. Join the revolution when their tour in support of that album hits the Sinclair on April 8. / Abagail Sullivan

YANKEE DOODLERS

There were no classrooms or teachers at the New York School, and it issued no degrees. An avant-garde movement that made the Big Apple an international art powerhouse in the 1950s, the New York School was made up of artists who refused to paint by numbers, rejecting traditional styles in favor of abstract, messy, expressive strokes. Manhattan's James Gallery, directed by artist James Gahagan, was among the first to feature the modern movement. The space closed its doors in 1962, but now the Artists of the James Gallery exhibit has brought its works, including Gahagan's own Jubilant Harvest (pictured here), to Boston. Find your inner bohemian at ACME Fine Art through April 26. / Abagail Sullivan

SPATULAS AND SPOOLS

He's like a next-level Martha Stewart—if Martha was a buzzed-about Norwegian dude covered in ink. Prop stylist extraordinaire Paul Lowe found fame when he expanded his Internet portfolio into the food/craft blog and online magazine Sweet Paul. Six years later, Lowe's cooked up his first book, Sweet Paul Eat & Make: Charming Recipes and Kitchen Crafts You Will Love. The book features well-crafted recipes (a highlight is breakfast polenta with hazelnuts, pears and honey) alongside easy-to-follow home projects (such as bent-fork bookends and vegetable-dyed tablecloths) that don't require a culinary degree or art fellowship to master. Gastronomy meets glitter glue on April 10 at Brookline Booksmith. / Rima Butto

We Salute Boston's Finest Restaurants and Clubs

CENTRAL WHARF CO., the Financial District's newest eatery!

Restaurants

BACK DECK Professional Backyard Grilling [2 West Street (Corner of Washington), Boston, 617-670-0320, BackDeckBoston.com] Drawing inspiration from a New England back yard and featuring a menu of grill-focused favorites and patio sipping cocktails, Back Deck is an urban oasis in downtown Boston. With floor to ceiling windows and an open kitchen, Back Deck brings the outdoors inside and provides the perfect setting to enjoy the fun and flavor of hard-wood charcoal grilling year round.

THE BLACK ROSE [160 State Street, Boston, 617-742-2286, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Voted one of America's top ten Irish establishments, The Black Rose is Boston's premier Irish pub and restaurant. Established in 1976, the pub is located in the historic Faneuil Hall/Quincy Market area of Boston, and known far and wide for its convivial atmosphere, good food and live Irish entertainment. The menu features honest, made-from-scratch food including traditional Irish fare, award winning clam chowder, fish and chips, native lobster, aged Black Angus cuts of beef, and of course Mother Sweeney's corned beef – a recipe from Mother Sweeney herself! For thirty years The Black Rose has offered live Irish music seven nights a week. Memorable guests on stage have included members of the Chieftans, flutist James Galway, Tommy Makim, Liam Clancy, John Denver, and a once relatively unknown member of an Irish rock group called U2.

BROWNSTONE [11 Dartmouth Street, Boston, MA, 617-867-4142, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Situated on the border of Back Bay and the South End, Brownstone is named for the style and elegance reflective of the architecture of Boston's two neighborhoods. From the hardwood flooring to the Venetian plaster ceiling, the interior exudes classic warmth with a sleek and intimate bar made of mahogany and granite. Brownstone's menu features small plates with big flavors! It also has one of the best brunches in Back Bay and Monthly Beer and Wine Dinners.

CENTRAL WHARF CO. [160 Milk Street, Boston. 617-451-9460, centralwharf@irishconnection.com] The most recent addition to the Glynn Hospitality Group portfolio, Central Wharf Co. located on Milk Street is the newest hot spot in the financial district. Whether you are coming for dinner or meeting friends for some of our hand crafted cocktails, Central Wharf's welcoming atmosphere is reaffirmed by its gastronomic offerings. With a focus on healthy preparations and locally sourced ingredients, their simple comfort foods concepts are enhanced buy their contemporary accompaniment

COOGANS [171 Milk Street, Boston, 617-451-7415, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Located on the corner of laid back and good times, Coogan's is a business man's retreat by day and party people destination by night. Just on the edge of the Financial District, Coogan's is a cozy little neighborhood bar. Friendly Staff serves up fresh American style pub food and some of the best deals in Boston.

FORUM [755 Boylston St Boston MA 02116, 857-991-1831, forumboston.com] Gather, indulge, repeat! Forum is located across from the Mandarin Oriental hotel and Lord & Taylor shops, overlooking glitzy Boylston Street, a hotspot for locals, tourists and celebrities. Two distinct floors, al fresco dining, two bars, and a modern function room for up to 60 guests. Indulge in New American cuisine such as Duck Confit, Halibut on Lobster Chorizo Risotto, Bone Marrow Encrusted Filet, or Wild Mushrooms Gnocchi. Open Daily.

HURRICANE O'REILLY'S [150 Canal Street, Boston, 617-722-0161, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] It's Hurricane season on Canal Street! The spirit of Mardi Gras and the French Quarter in the heart of the city. Serving Irish, American and Cajun specialties and conveniently located just steps away from the TD Garden. Voted best "Hockey Bar" in Boston by USA today, Hurricane's is the perfect place to gather pre- and post- game. After the sun sets on Canal Street, Hurricane's lights up into one of Boston's hottest nightclubs with a top 40 play list, illuminating disco lights and 6,800 square feet of Mardi Gras spirit.

MISTRAL [223 Columbus Ave, Boston, 617-867-9300, mistralbistro.com] Located in Boston's stylish South End, Mistral features the award winning French Mediterranean cuisine of Chef/Owner Jamie Mammano. The dining room's high ceilings and arched floor to ceiling windows encircle the candlelit room and evoke a warm feeling of casual sophistication. Le Salon du Mistral, Mistral's private dining room provides an intimate setting for gatherings of 60 seated for brunch, lunch and dinner and up to 80 for a cocktail reception. Sunday Brunch. Dinner Sunday-Saturday. Complimentary car service available in metro Boston.

NUBAR [16 Garden St., Cambridge MA, 02138, 617-234-1365, nubarcambridge.com] Nubar is an elegant, but comfortable neighborhood restaurant in the Harvard Square area. Chef Bill Flumerfelt's menu is creative American, with Mediterranean accents, sourcing locally whenever available. The wine list and our original cocktails will tickle your palette – great flavors for reasonable $.Whether you're in our fireside lounge, at our glowing honey onyx bar, or on our leather banquettes in the main dining room, you'll love our space.

OSTRA [1 Charles Street South, Boston, 617.421.1200, www.ostraboston.com] Ostra, located in Boston's Back Bay, is a contemporary Mediterranean seafood restaurant. Chef/Owner Jamie Mammano and Executive Chef Mitchell Randall focus on specialty seafood found throughout the Mediterranean and regions within the U.S. The dining room at Ostra evokes a sense of style and sophistication in a comfortable and inviting setting. Ostra also offers a fine bar and lounge area featuring live piano entertainment. Ostra's private dining room accommodates up to 42 for a seated event and 70 for a cocktail reception. Dinner Sunday through Saturday. Complimentary car service available in metro Boston.

SUNSET GRILL & TAP [130 Brighton Ave., Allston, 617-254-1331] SUNSET CANTINA [916 Commonwealth Ave., Boston, 617-731-8646] Don't just come for Boston's Best Beer Selection featuring 112 taps and 300 microbrews. Come also to enjoy Boston's award winning steam beer burgers and famous curly fries, original buffalo wings and giant nachos. Still hungry? Try our juicy BBQ steak tips, grilled fish, homemade pastas, tender Yankee ribs or our sizzling fajitas. Full menu until 1 a.m.

TEATRO [177 TremontStreet, Boston, 617-778-6841, teatroboston.com] A leading player in downtown's Theatre District, Teatro offers Chef Owner Jamie Mammano's take on rustic Italian cuisine. The restaurant recalls lavish stage productions and high drama with its stunning arched mosaic ceiling and marble inlaid walls. The triumphant curtain call — a riveting open kitchen. Enjoy pre- and post-show cocktails, plus your star turn for dinner Tuesday through Sunday evenings. (Closed Monday).

DILLON'S [955 Boylston Street, Boston, 617-421-1818, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Dillon's blends after-work chill with cocktail chic. It's the ideal spot to bring a date, loosen your tie after work or watch the game with friends. Built in 1887 and a historic landmark in Boston, the venue is named after Capt. S. Dillon, who was stationed here from 1920-1950. Like its namesake, Dillon's is known for its warm hospitality, engaging people and spirited nightlife. An all American menu, two levels, and the best patio in the Back Bay make Dillon's a local favorite. The best place on Boylston to celebrate!

CLERYS [113 DARTMOUTH STREET, BOSTON, 617-262-9874, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Located a block from Copley Plaza at the corner of Dartmouth and Columbus, this bistro and bar has consistently earned the title "Boston's Best Neighborhood Bar". Enjoy one of the 21 draught beers, either at one of t he three bars, by the bistro windows, or by the fireplace in a cozy booth when the fickle New England weather turns cold. It's the perfect place to meet friends and enjoy a comfortable atmosphere with fast & friendly bartenders. On select nights partake in team trivia or dance the night away with DJ Rhythm Nights. Downstairs is a private and roomy space featuring a full bar and dance floor, and is the perfect nook for company functions and holiday parties.

LIVIN' LA VIDA LOCA

New England Conservatory went Latin with its annual Feast of Music gala—an evening of food, music and dancing with sizzle seldom seen north of Caracas.

Held at the Fairmont Copley Plaza, the fiesta began with cocktails in the Oval Room, followed by a feast in the ballroom, each course interspersed with performances of music by composers ranging from Astor Piazzolla to Boston's own Osvaldo Golijov. After dessert and coffee, it was back to the Oval Room to samba, salsa, meringue and tango the night away.

Present and accounted for: the strikingly lovely Sydney Winthrop and her architect husband, Jonathan, New York import Permele Doyle squired by the dashing Miguel de Bragança, his swanlike sister, Annabel, smoking-hot painter Fernando DeOliveira and Brazilian beauty Giuliana Moltin, force of nature Doreen Corkin and leading man Chris Mitchum, interior design avatar Duncan Hughes and his ivory-tickling other half, Cameron Stowe, Russian Bond girl Rita Rudyak, the flawless Deb Hanley, M. le Chevalier Marvin Gilmore, department store heiress Hope Lincoln Baker, Japanese pop star Yuki Hori, and so on and so forth. Noticeably absent: Frank Wisneski and his wife, Lynn Dale, who were thanked repeatedly for their largesse throughout the evening but who were, in fact, sunning themselves on Mustique, having sent daughter Ashley Wisneski and her main squeeze, Will Heward, in their stead. Additional fun fact: Ashley and Will ended up winning the raffle prize.

The twinkle-toed tripped the light fantastic well into the wee hours, and the general consensus was that the whole thing was swanky to the nth degree.

Meanwhile, the evening's most amusing exchange: A guest said to a friend, "That's quite a dress," to which she responded, "It's quite an ordeal to get into it."

TREADING WATER

Cross-pollinating nonprofit efforts, Save Venice Boston hosted an afternoon soiree, Vivaldi's Venice, featuring a performance by the Handel and Haydn Society at Symphony Hall.

The highly entertaining concert was followed by a highly edifying reception at Horticultural Hall, where guests could rub elbows with the likes of Beacon Hill party pair Liz and Peter Georgantas, the stunning Anne Fitzpatrick Cucchiaro, MFA big cheese Frederick Ilchman, über-do-gooder Hope Stockton, hedge fund hipster Shane Merriweather, art dealer Richard Baiano, the dashing David DeSimone with brunette beauty Gina Morda, BU professor James Johnson (who gave a brief and fascinating lecture) and numerous equally sparkly others.

A buffet supper was served. The wine flowed freely. And, as one guest put it, "The only better way to spend a Sunday afternoon would be to actually be in Venice."

TYRA BANKS WON'T BE CALLING

In an ongoing quest to experience the humiliation of a reality TV star, yours truly took a page from the America's Next Top Model playbook by agreeing to appear in Denise Hajjar's annual fundraising fashion show to benefit the Big Sister Association.

"The only better way to spend a Sunday afternoon would be to actually be in Venice."

A runway ran the entire length of the Fairmont Copley Plaza's ballroom, which was packed to the rafters with the likes of emcee Susan Wornick, mega-philanthropist Don Rodman, fashion designer David Josef and his handsome husband, Danny Forrester, Back Bay brunette Lori Sullivan, the eternally blond Anja Kola, WBZ babe Lisa Hughes, marketing guru Joan Jolley and countless others, who watched the models strut their stuff, escorted by the likes of advertising tycoon Jack Connors, TV stud Paul Burton, party planner extraordinaire Bryan Rafanelli, the absurdly handsome Jeff Bellows and yours truly, fervently praying that I wouldn't trip.

The good news is that I didn't. Even better: The evening raised more than $100K for a very worthwhile cause. On the downside, though: There is now further photographic evidence that I walk like a constipated duck. ◆

DRINK IT IN

I HAD MY VERY FIRST SIP OF ALCOHOL AS A sheltered 17-year-old, stuck at an epically bad party in the dark depths of backwoods Florida. Someone had broken out a bottle of Goldschläger, which glimmered like a magical potion and tasted like lighter fluid. At most, I managed a third of the shot shoved my way, which left me wondering: Why on earth would people drink any of this stuff? (That sentiment had only solidified by the evening's end, when I wound up with someone else's vomit on my sleeve.)

Little did I know that drawing conclusions from said drinking experience was like assuming Mickey D's is the be-all and end-all of cuisine. I fortunately wound up back in Boston, a city of stellar bartending talent that has since introduced me to flips and fizzes, shrubs and shandies, house-made milk punch and infusions galore—not to mention the kind of hospitality that can make a favorite haunt feel like a second home.

In this issue, MC Slim JB interviews a dozen rising stars from that scene, tapping them for insights on trends and trade secrets, from must-try spirits to in-house code words. Meanwhile, Nancy Gaines profiles a martini master who's been in the hospitality biz for more than four decades, as well as a new crop of mobile bartenders who'll bring the booze to you. Alix Childs rounds up some snazzy tools for the home imbiber. Donna Garlough dives into a new dive bar's grub. And for our travel column, Scott Kearnan checks into a Vermont hotel that'll serve you a tasty hot toddy in bed. But as this issue shows, you don't have to leave town—or even your block, in all likelihood—to find a well-made libation these days. Cheers to that. (But please, make it anything but Goldschläger.)

CALLING ON THE BOSTON VOLUNTEERS

There are three faces of the Boston Marathon. There are the runners who—deservedly—get the glory, garnering national attention for the race. There are the spectators who line the course for miles, motivating marathoners with their energy. And then there are the 10,000 volunteers. With each step a runner takes from Hopkinton to Back Bay, there's almost always at least one of them in sight. Why do they do it? "I think the marathon is like your life. There are times when you're going to be running. There are times when you're going to be cheering others on," explains volunteer Ann Everett. "All the people in our life that make it possible for us to live, that's how I look at all the volunteers." In the wake of last year's tragedy, they're all the more committed. Read on for four of their stories, from the Athletes' Village to the finish line.)))

COURSE OF ACTION

A LOOK AT LONGTIME MARATHON VOLUNTEERS // Matt Martinelli

PETER MUNDY

THE MAN BEHIND THE BOOMING VOICE that can be heard throughout the Athletes' Village, Mundy gets runners moving well before they reach the starting line. From the time the first bus arrives at 6 am till the last runner begins the race at around 11:30 am, he's perched on the press box in Hopkinton, spouting directions to the start line, as well as updating "the unofficial official time." Mundy started as a bus greeter for the centennial race in 1996, but he's been the village announcer for 14 years. His role on the stage includes a little bit of Siri, a dash of Jimmy Kimmel (he's interviewed the likes of Ayla Brown and Johnny Kelley "the Elder") and some Wizard of Oz-style vocal power (announcing that there's no line at the port-a-potties can really rouse the racers). "What a lot of people forget is Hopkinton is the only place where all your runners are at one time," Mundy says. "If I can at least make these guys start out with a smile on their face, it's up to them to finish it."

"I'm hopeful that the special feeling that this is our event, this is a local event, isn't changed."

ANN EVERETT

EVERETT'S MISSION AS SHE STANDS in front of the Gatorade station at Mile 20.05: Make Heartbreak Hill a little less heartbreaking. But before she can offer words of encouragement or walk alongside an ailing runner, there's a hydration station to set up. The team of several dozen volunteers arrives at 7:30 am and unlocks the BAA shed that holds the tables, trash liners and water barrels. Next comes a quick refresher on how to hand out the water—hold it at the bottom, not the top!—as they pray a stiff wind doesn't blow over the stacks of filled cups on the 18 tables. Then it's go time. A runner in three Boston Marathons and a volunteer since 1996, Everett will never forget her interaction with one elite female racer who suddenly started walking six miles from the finish line: "I said, 'You know what? You're obviously a very elite runner. And this is obviously an atypical result for you. I just want you to remember this is just one race.' And she turned around, and she smiled, and she mouthed the words 'Thank you.' And that meant the world to me. That sums up the spirit."

CURT COMBER

COMBER IS ONE OF THE LUCKY FEW volunteers who get to see the entire course, from the bands playing in Framingham to the screaming college kids along the route in Boston. After loading wheelchairs at 4:30 am, he oversees a warm-up and then starts the course with the wheelchair division. But it's shortly after the elite women begin at 9:30 that he really springs into action. Comber and seven other cyclists ride the gap between the final women's wheelchair participants and the leading elite women (who are tracked by at least a half-dozen vehicles), making sure none of the runners, trucks or wheelchair competitors collide. Although his role is to keep marathoners safe, he does wonder whether the added security this year will alter the race. "I'm worried that it's going to be more structured, more separation, more formal and maybe a little stiffer," says Comber. "I'm hopeful that the special feeling that this is our event, this is a local event, isn't changed."

CHERYL PARCELLIN

THIS YEAR'S MARATHON WON'T BE the same for Parcellin, but it's not simply because the memories of the bombing are still fresh—it's because she won't have her friend Diane Massa by her side just past the finish line. Diagnosed with myeloma in November, Massa will be undergoing stem-cell treatment at Dana-Farber, missing her first marathon after 11 straight years of handing medals to runners alongside Parcellin. The pair were together last year at 2:49 pm when they heard a loud noise and saw smoke. Parcellin looked at Massa and heard her volunteer captain, who just said: "Run." The friends were separated amid the chaos, but shared a long hug (and some whiskey) upon reuniting outside the Park Plaza. Now, a year after the tragic ending to the marathon, Parcellin is facing the reality of another race that won't feel quite right. "It's going to be a tough one without [Massa]. We're like a team. We do this together. But I'm doing it obviously for me, for her, for the runners." And Massa has faith that their marathon tradition will soon be back to normal: "I'll be back next year for sure."

FIRED UP!

LA BRASA HOPES TO HEAT UP SOMERVILLE.

STUFFED TO THE GRILLS: Daniel Bojorquez promises the wood-burning grill at La Brasa will add some theatrical flair to dinner.

La Brasa
124 Broadway, Somerville
(617-764-1412) labrasasomerville.com

AFTER YEARS OF PLANNING AND AN anticipation-building pop-up, Somerville restaurant La Brasa is finally set to open by the end of April. It's been a long journey for first-time chef/owner Daniel Bojorquez, who started mulling over the concept seven years ago. But you could argue La Brasa's roots reach much further back in time—back to, say, early humans using fire.

"It's an open fire, humble food, great product," Bojorquez says. "It's going to be an open kitchen, and there will be a whole theatrical effect. People stand next to a chimney or fireplace in their home, and that's the kind of feel I think this grill with the fire is going to have."

That homey feel extends to the menu itself. "People ask me, what's the style of food I'm doing," Bojorquez says. "I say to people, 'Pretty much when you go to my house, that's what I'll be cooking at La Brasa.' And people say, 'What do you cook at home?' And, well, you've got to come to my house to check it out." He does admit that he expects to draw from his French training (he most recently worked at Sel de la Terre in Natick and before that under Frank McClelland at L'Espalier), his Mexican roots and even his current neighborhood of Dorchester, where he's surrounded by a lot of Vietnamese food. But each day's menu options will be driven by the selections of meat coming into the adjoining market and the vegetables arriving from McClelland's Apple Street Farm.

Bojorquez promises one dish will be a whole grilled ribeye with chimichurri sauce, something he's been making for years at the request of friends. There will always be dishes with beef, chicken and lamb, as well as a variety of game meat specials like venison, all prepared on the wood-burning grill at the heart of the restaurant. Paired with the grilled offerings is a cocktail menu from Matthew Schrage with a lot of rums, mezcals and infused liquors.

Bojorquez predicts the eclectic offerings will fit in well in Somerville, a city of diverse demographics that's seen several recent openings of restaurants that serve cuisine of consequence. He plans to keep prices in the teens and twenties, and he hopes that the raw interior will likewise appeal to the neighborhood crowd.

"It's very apocalyptic, with a Texas after-the-war feel to it," Bojorquez says. "It's got a very Mad Max feel."

Q&A

DEEP DISHING

In the '90s, if you'd guessed what the kid in Home Alone would be doing in a couple of decades, playing kazoo in a pizza-themed Velvet Underground tribute band probably wouldn't have topped the list. Life's funny like that. We chatted with Macaulay Culkin's bandmate, vocalist/tambourinist Austin Kilham of the Pizza Underground, in advance of what's sure to be a strange show at Church on April 19.

THE OBVIOUS QUESTION: WHY A PIZZA-THEMED VELVET UNDERGROUND TRIBUTE BAND? I think with pizza and the Velvet Underground, you really get a New York twofer. Pizza is a New York icon, as is the Velvet Underground. I don't really see why someone else didn't get to it first.

VELVET UNDERGROUND'S "HEROIN" IS SUPPOSED TO MIMIC THE FEELING OF BEING ON HEROIN. IS IT POSSIBLE TO MUSICALLY MIMIC THE FEELING OF BEING ON... PIZZA? We certainly don't like to say anything is impossible. Like "Heroin," it would have to have a slow build as you waited for the slice to come out of the oven. Then maybe some percussion, a shaker perhaps, to mimic shaking the red pepper flakes and Parmesan over the slice. The song would build to its climax as you eat the slice and then, depending on your personal preferences, may stop short at the crust.

I HAVE NO IDEA IF LOU REED WAS A BIG PIZZA FAN. BUT ASSUMING HE WAS, WHAT DO YOU THINK HIS FAVORITE PIZZA PLACE MIGHT HAVE BEEN? We were actually told recently, by a friend of Lou Reed's—and we have no reason to doubt this—that he was, in fact, a pizza fan and that his favorite pizza place was Joe's on Carmine in the West Village. We were psyched about that because that's our Manhattan spot too.

WHENEVER I THINK OF PIZZA I THINK OF THE TEENAGE MUTANT NINJA TURTLES—THEY LOVED PIZZA. WHO WAS YOUR FAVORITE TURTLE? I was torn as a kid. My brothers were clearly Raphael and Michelangelo. That left me with Leonardo, who had too much responsibility, and Donatello, whose staffs just aren't as cool as swords.

DEEP DISH OR THIN CRUST? Debates about deep dish have made it to the Supreme Court, or so I hear, but thin crust all the way. / Alexandra Cavallo

DRINKING BUDS: Aeronaut is a place of collaboration.

HOPPY HOUR

Slated to launch in May, Aeronaut is navigating some uncharted skies, and not just because it'll be the first brewery in Somerville since the 1880s. The four founders have high hopes for their 12,000-square-foot home in Union Square, which has plenty of room for other crafts entirely, not simply craft beers.

One-third of the industrial space is dedicated to creating Aeronaut's inaugural brews, like an imperial stout, a hoppy black ale and a smoked butternut squash beer, complete with applewood and bonfire aromas. The former homebrewers, who studied science and engineering at MIT, Harvard and Yale, tested at least 50 batches during the past seven months to finalize their recipes. "You don't use the test tube for inventing a beer," co-founder Ben Holmes says. "You use it for making sure that you can make it the same way every time." The founding four's taste preferences tend toward a rustic farmhouse style—they're currently experimenting with a maple beer using sap collected from trees on the Tufts campus.

The brewers also hope to collaborate with their new roommates. Sharing their space with sustainable coffee roaster Barismo, organic farm delivery service Something Gud and bean-to-bar CSA Somerville Chocolate, the Aeronaut team ultimately wants to operate like a full-time farmers market. "We wanted to build a place where we could work with people that spent their lives thinking about where things come from," Holmes says. And eventually, if business is flowing well, they'd like to serve as a startup accelerator of sorts, using brewery proceeds to invest in companies through a rotating residency program. With a lot of local breweries to use as inspiration—their favorites include Chelsea's Mystic Brewery and Framingham's Jack's Abby Brewing—the folks from Aeronaut could soon have a lot of people looking up to them. / Hannah Sheinberg

Purveyors: How About Them Apples

Bantam's flagship cider, Wunderkind, is named for Amelia Earhart, but the term could just as easily apply to the two-year-old Somerville cidery itself. Its ciders have spread to bars and stores throughout town, and last month, Bantam opened a tap room in Union Square. The eight taps include some experimental offerings, but don't overlook the original Wunderkind, with a thick body and raspy sweetness from a touch of honey. And keep an eye out for its siblings, the peppercorn- and sour cherry-infused Rojo, the barrel-aged La Grande and the new Smoked Saison. / Elizabeth Bomze

CAPS OFF: Think outside the bottle at Bantam's tap room, open 4-7 pm on Thursday and Friday and 1-7 pm on Saturday.

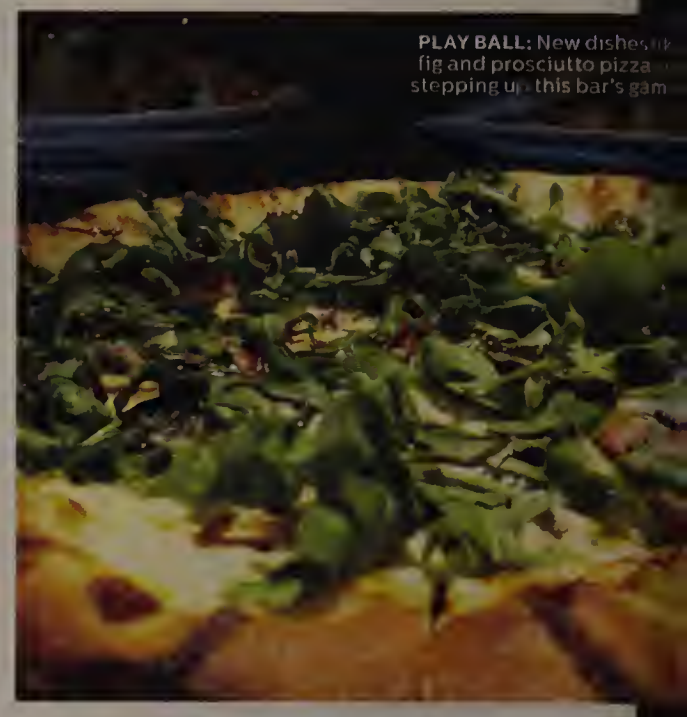
A REAL PLAYER

CASK 'N FLAGON UPS ITS GAME.



PLAY BALL: New dishes, like fig and prosciutto pizza, stepping up this bar's game

IT'S HARD TO CALL A PLACE THAT'S BEEN lauded with "top sports bar" awards for years under the radar, but Cask 'n Flagon has been serving fans outside Fenway Park for so long that it sometimes gets lost in the bustle of Lansdowne Street. But ever since chef Donley Liburd took over the kitchen nearly two years ago, he's been gradually upgrading the culinary repertoire. A veteran of the short-lived but well-regarded Bouchee as well as Petit Robert Central, Liburd is also an award-winning pit master. His spring menu features a roster of Texas-style BBQ dishes distinguished by slow-smoking and the application of "Big D's BBQ Sauce," with ingredients that include tamarind, apple juice and molasses. Liburd makes everything from scratch, uses local produce when available and sources his seafood from purveyors that include Legal Sea Foods (even the humble Fisherman's Platter is elevated with the addition of day-boat scallops). Another menu highlight: Malaysian-style ribs, flavored with a sweet-and-salty coffee reduction (a great way to use leftover coffee, says Liburd). The most popular item? "It's a toss-up between the steak tips and the fish tacos," Liburd says.

DROPS FROM JUNIPER

OUT IN THE SUBURBS, SWEET BASIL CHEF Dave Becker is finally relaxing a bit as he prepares to open his second restaurant, Juniper, where Milestone currently sits in Wellesley Center. "The level of drama this little restaurant has generated" surprised him, he says. "There were lawyers yelling at each other and hanging up on each other, and I got billed for it!" Now, though, he's been granted a full liquor license, and it's on to "the easy things—the things I'm not worried about, like the menu and running the bar." If all goes well, a July opening is planned.

Good Eats: Leek Peek

You can feel spring everywhere these days, but the blooming that's synonymous with the season really resonates at Grill 23. The steakhouse recently completed a makeover of its bar, which now shines with mirrors, flat screens and floor-to-ceiling windows facing Berkeley Street, not to mention chef Jay Murray's first bar menu. Expect fresh takes on snacks, such as the roasted-then-grilled leeks wrapped in house-cured pancetta. It's a playful contrast of greens and meat that carries into the garnish with garlicky, truffled arugula aioli and chicharron puffs. / Elizabeth Bomze

BARKS, BEATS AND BEEF

TO THE OWNER OF THE OH-SO-CUTE GOLDENDOODLE: When your dog growled and lunged at my dog today, the appropriate response was not to giggle and cheerfully ask your dog to leave mine alone. Your dog is not cute. It's a bully, and when I went to pat my dog after you walked around the corner, my hand came away covered in blood because your dog bit mine. Your dog is not harmless and endearing. It is an obnoxious jerk, and you are an irresponsible dog owner. Train your dog. Become aware that even the cutest dogs are still dogs, and when your dog growls and lunges, it is something you need to notice and address. Or, better yet, give your dog to someone who deserves to own it.

Biting back

TO THE YOUNG MOTHER ON THE ASHMONT-BOUND T: I get that you like your music, and that's cool. However, I could hear it over the music I had in my headphones. I'm asking on behalf of other T riders that you please consider buying a set of earbuds. You don't need anything fancy—a $20 set would do—and your fellow riders would be very grateful.

Too many tunes

TO THE OBLIVIOUS HIPSTER BARTENDER AT THE ONLY HIPSTER BAR ON MOODY STREET IN WALTHAM: Stop being so thick and realize that you're actually there to serve customers. You clearly love being behind the bar, and you certainly look the part, but please at least acknowledge my existence with a "hello" or a "one moment" when I'm sitting 2 feet from you putting glasses away or talking craft beer with another patron. This bar is awesome; don't ruin it with your cluelessness.

Drink of the Moment
MAPLE MANHATTAN

PRICE: $10

INGREDIENTS: Knob Creek Smoked Maple, sweet vermouth and a lemon twist

FLAVOR: Bourbon in place of traditional rye gives this rendition a sweeter side. "It has a smoky flavor to it," says bar manager Kyle Friedman. "It honestly tastes like breakfast." Though we don't (necessarily) recommend that it be consumed as such.

FRUITFUL DRINKING: Find a happy ending with liquor-saturated fruit. The brandy-soaked cherry on the bottom is also featured in the Old Fashioned.

PAIR IT WITH: The double-cut pork chop ($24). "It has the apple chutney right on top," Friedman says, which complements the maple. Or enjoy it on its own: The cocktail's sweetness lends itself to liquid dessert. After all, this is the financial district, and J.P. Morgan liked to cap off each trading day with a Manhattan.

CENTRAL WHARF CO.
160 Milk St., Boston
(617-451-9460)
glynnhospitalitygroup.com

NEW DIGS: Since its recent renovation, the former home of Jose McIntyre's now sports a darker lounge vibe and a bustling post-work crowd. Expect faster service at the upstairs bar, which previously had a single terminal but now runs the entire length of the building.

CONTEXT: The cocktail menu aims for simplicity, with the Central Wharf Co. team offering classics like Moscow mules and champagne cocktails while transitioning away from margaritas and frozen drinks. Also check out the wine program and extensive beer list—the plan is to rotate craft beer drafts each season.

SPRING AWAKENING: Friedman and general manager Mike Barry plan to add five more cocktails to the menu. / Sarah Hagman

NORTH STAR

HOTEL VERMONT SHOWS BURLINGTON IN A BEAUTIFUL NEW LIGHT.

BOSTONIANS RESERVE A SPECIAL EYE ROLL for a certain breed of contemptuous New Yorker: The type of visitors who sniff about how surprised they are by the high quality of the South End restaurant you reserved, or by the excellent exhibition at the ICA. Yet it's not uncommon for Bostonians to turn a similarly patronizing side-eye to the smaller cities of northern New England—as though idyllic nicknames like "The Green Mountain State" are really just code for "Here There Be Dragons and Toothless Banjo Quartets!"

Those assumptions fail to account for properties like Hotel Vermont in Burlington, one of several new and recently renovated accommodations (like the Topnotch Resort in Stowe, Vt., and the Hanover Inn in Hanover, N.H.) that are contemporizing the landscape of northern New England getaways, where lodging options are hardly limited to cramped B&Bs with crocheted pillow shams or once-grand, now-creaky resorts. Opened last year, Hotel Vermont deals in a rustic-chic that's fitting for a hotel in Vermont's largest city, which, with a population of about 42,000, still boasts plenty of bucolic charm.

The Hotel Vermont lobby greets guests with floors of poured concrete, laden with shells and pebbles from gorgeous Lake Champlain, which is just a stone's throw away. Sleek, low seating—looking straight out of a trendy cocktail lounge—clusters by a roaring wood-burning hearth. On one side of the lobby, a weekend DJ spins gentle house grooves on his turntables; on the other, front desk staff show guests to the rack of complimentary snowshoe rentals. This is a place for couples who want a romantic rural retreat without sacrificing citification. It's a place for 30-something hipsters who dress like lumberjacks on weekends—but only because they like the way those flannel shirts look through a lo-fi filter. It's cool. It's contemporary.

And it's comfortable. The 125 guest rooms aren't especially large, but they're stylish and smart: picture sleek blond wood furnishings and two separate bathroom units (a water closet and a stone-tiled shower room) partitioned off from the sleeping area by opaque pocket doors. The rooms are thoughtfully appointed with clever amenities, from Vermont Flannel pajamas to a "Story Time" booklet with prose provided by the Burlington Writers Workshop. A special "Bedtime Menu" lets you order several sleep aids: aromatherapy oils, a hot toddy and even a choice of teddy bear. And nearly everything in the room, from the handmade soaps (and soap dishes) to the Johnson Woolen Mills blankets, is made by local artisans and for sale. Want something? Prices are listed. Just shove it in your suitcase.

Another big draw: dining. Overlooking the lobby is Juniper, covered in white oak and boasting a buzzing bar that makes creative (and ample) use of spirits from Vermont distillers. The dining room serves fairly splendid fare that we city folk call "farm to table," but in Vermont is simply "food." And Hotel Vermont also holds the second location of Hen of the Wood, an acclaimed six-time James Beard award nominee and purveyor of polished New England-inspired plates.

In general, Burlington's food scene can compete with those of cities several times its size; "small-batch ingredients" and "local sourcing" aren't just buzzwords for a press release here. Be sure to visit American Flatbread, where pizzas are fired in an earthen oven before your eyes; the Farmhouse Tap & Grill, with its huge craft beer selection; Penny Cluse Cafe, a cheap breakfast and lunch gem; and the new tasting room of local favorite Citizen Cider. (Our favorite variety: the ginger-and-lemony "Dirty Mayor.") Then get double the buzz with coffee cocktails at Muddy Waters, a coffeehouse with a gnarled wood interior that feels like the hollowed-out tree home of a hobbit.

For shopping, pedestrians-only Church Street is postcard pretty and filled with a motley crew of quirky gift shops, high-end decor boutiques and a very few familiar brand stores, like Urban Outfitters (for the University of Vermont students) and Macy's (for their parents). The indie alt- and roots-rock bands that descend on music venues like Higher Ground and Nectar's keep the scene weird and wonderful. And the proximity to ski, bike and hiking trails ensures there's the opportunity to indulge in four seasons' worth of outdoor activity. You know, if you're into that.

If not, just enjoy sleeping, eating and shopping amid more fresh air and fewer frenetic distractions in a small-scale city with surprisingly sophisticated amenities. Even a New Yorker might agree. ◆

BROTHER'S KEEPER

TRAUMA TESTS THE TIES THAT BIND TWO UNCONVENTIONALLY RAISED SIBLINGS.

HOLLY RIKE

No Book but the World* by Leah Hager Cohen
Published by Riverhead Books, 320 pages, $28
The author lives in Massachusetts and is a creative writing faculty member at Lesley University.

COHEN'S FIFTH NOVEL FOLLOWS AVA AND her troubled younger brother, Freddy, raised by parents who believe in a free-form educational approach. Ironically, the unconventional freedom espoused by Neel and June, as their children call them, is rigidly enforced. This leaves Freddy, who flaps his arms and speaks in an idiosyncratic stutter that clearly signals his existence on "the spectrum," untethered and undiagnosed.

Cohen lyrically conveys Ava's connection to her brother, a kindred spirit despite his difference. But their imaginative frolics through a woodsy wonderland they nickname "Midgetropolis" can't dispel the inevitable problem: What will happen when he grows up? Will she be left as his caretaker? Guiltily fearing that outcome, Ava finds love, marries young and builds a secure life. Meanwhile, Freddy drifts and is mistreated by a drug dealer and a sketchy, sexy woman. He's innocent, lost and confused, dragging along his still-childish self like a worn teddy bear.

Then Ava learns that Freddy has been arrested and accused of a horrible crime. Their parents dead, their lawyer lackadaisical, Ava visits Freddy in jail, delving into the details of the crime and pondering the many layers of family connection and responsibility. Who are we to each other? And, given the lasting power of their childhood bond, was their parents' partly nutty philosophy a blessing after all?

FROM PAGE 145: It was as if in this one instant I'd been given the power to realize the crucial thing about my brother: that his odd and persistent compulsion to drum, to beat and tap and kick at things, was not pointless and arbitrary, not simply an annoying tic. He needed to disrupt order and pattern, to search out and produce irregularity, randomness. He had a horror of anything lock-step. I loved him searingly in that moment. ◆

HIGH DIVE

THE HUNGRY MOTHER TEAM GETS DOWN AND DIRTY WITH A NEW CAMBRIDGE NIGHTSPOT.

STATE PARK
1 Kendall Square, Cambridge
(617-848-4355)
statepark.is

SCAN MENUS ACROSS TOWN, AND YOU'LL stumble upon more than a few dishes that seem plucked from a mid-'80s roller-rink menu: Frito pie, American chop suey, Funfetti ice cream in a waffle cone. Meanwhile, perfectly capable bartenders across the city are cracking cans of Natty Light and bottles of Bud Light Lime faster than you can shake a white tablecloth of its crumbs. When did lowbrow become so haute?

Taking "so bad it's good" to new heights is State Park, an unlikely launch by the team at the beloved Southern bistro Hungry Mother. They've outfitted the former Think Tank space in Kendall Square with everything a style-conscious renovator would peel out: grooved wall panels, vintage backlit Michelob signs, captain's chairs clad in red vinyl, and dim stained-glass pendant lights. The result is jarringly, comically realistic—a life-size re-creation of the type of decades-old dive you'd stumble upon en route to Reno. Taxidermied critters, frozen in mid-skitter, catch your gaze from atop the jukebox or above the bar. One could imagine the fun that was had scouring eBay, or raiding estate sales across the red states, to procure them.

As he takes your order for a State Park cocktail—which turns out to be a bottle of High Life spiked with rye and amaro, which together taste like carbonated tile cleaner—a bartender smirks. Is it because we're not cool enough to appreciate the drink's ironic charm? Or could it be, my companion wonders, that it's an elaborate joke on the very hipsters that line the bar, throwing back one horrid $9.50 drink after another?

We chew on the topic over bread-and-butter pickles ($3), which pack surprising kick, and await a table. Expect at least a 30-minute wait after 7 pm—even longer if the hostess takes your name, then promptly forgets to write it down.

Luckily, this gives you ample time to sample the better cocktails, like Tom Collins and Pimm's Cups (available by the pitcher, $35.50), or three excellent and aromatic rye-based creations, the Green Walnut ($11), the Hiccups ($10) and the Pine ($10).

You can also peruse the menu, a lineup that seems dredged up from someone's potluck menu in 1983, then made less healthy. (Note to paleo dieters: Don't even bother.) Creamy cheese with red-pepper jelly ($6) is mousse-like yet rich, a great combo of sweetness and tang. It's feather-light compared to the grilled pimento cheese sandwich ($9.50), a runny layering of orange cheese, bacon and tomato on toasty buttered bread. The Kentucky Hot Brown ($13) is, quite literally, a hot mess: a turkey-and-bacon sandwich covered in cheese sauce and broiled, then crowned with a fried egg.

Sauce, butter, cheese: All play key roles in the Memphis BBQ spaghetti, a plate of spaghetti and pork shoulder tossed in tomato-and-BBQ sauce and served with thick, Texas toast-style garlic bread ($11). It's as sloppy and heavy as it sounds, and pretty darn delicious.

Tobacco onions ($3.95), an amber-brown nest of fried strings, sit on nearly every table, for good reason. Fried catfish with hushpuppies ($12.50), on the other hand, has a fabulously crunchy batter coating but is nearly flavorless, as is the fried pickled okra ($5.95). Fried chicken ($16) is juicy and gets a boost from the fiery hot sauce ($2 extra), which our server suggested ordering on the side. It's good advice, given the heat.

If you're hoping to cut the heaviness of your meal with a vegetable, go for collards ($4.50), which are green and tender. Roasted broccoli with "kentuckyaki" ($5), on the other hand, is salt-laden. But really: Vegetables? Save room instead for the Luxardo cherry float ($6.95), a soupy mix of Harpoon stout, creamy ice cream and maraschino-laced cherries, then cap off the meal with a round of pool or a few games of pinball by the bar. It's no roller rink, but it'll have to do. ◆

ASK CHERYL

Q: IS LASER HAIR REMOVAL A SMART THING TO DO?

A: Laser hair reduction is one of our most popular treatments, especially this time of year when more of our body is exposed. Think of the time and discomfort you will save over the years by not having to shave or wax, and the increased confidence that comes from knowing your skin is always smooth and hair-free; no more embarrassment.

All areas of the body can be treated. The most popular areas for women are the face, underarms, bikini area, and legs. For men, the neck, back, chest and shoulders. If you are prone to ingrown hairs, laser hair removal will eliminate that problem.

Most people who have laser hair removal are incredibly happy with the results, but as with other laser procedures, make certain to select an experienced professional for optimal results.

INDEPENDENTS DAYS

DESPITE DIFFICULTIES, IFFBOSTON IS STILL THE REEL DEAL IN ITS 12TH YEAR.

WITH MORE WAYS THAN EVER TO consume movies—from the popcorn-strewn floors of the local multiplexes to Netflix and Hulu, On Demand and even BitTorrent (not that you'd know anything about that, aye, mateys?)—what's the point of gathering for a weeklong film festival?

It all boils down to community, according Brian Tamm, managing director of the Independent Film Festival Boston, the pre-eminent event of its kind in New England. The 12th annual IFFBoston takes place April 23-30, spanning venues in Somerville, Cambridge and Brookline.

"The films bring people together, but it's also about connecting with the filmmakers and connecting with each other," Tamm says. "Whether it's about something that's very local, like the Aaron Swartz documentary"—The Internet's Own Boy: The Story of Aaron Swartz, Brian Knappenberger's look at the Reddit co-founder and Harvard fellow who took his own life, screening April 28 at the Somerville Theatre—"or whether it's something broader than that, it's about people coming together in a room and having an experience together, and then sharing it."

It's also about discovery, according to Nancy Campbell, a former managing director and IFFBoston's newly minted program director (taking over for Adam Roffman, who still serves in an advisory role). "We definitely want to celebrate the works of people who are masterful at what they have done, but it's great to engage people with new work," Campbell says.

"Everyone has had that experience where they've seen a movie, and they think, 'Oh my god, I need to tell everyone about this,' and this festival is all about that feeling, but on a much bigger scale," Tamm adds.

"It feels like we are doing more with less every year, and it's not a game of Jenga that we can continue playing without help."

"I think it's amazing when you have Brian Cox, or Ben Kingsley or Kevin Kline," Tamm continues, naming a few of IFFBoston's notable past guests, "and you bring them into the Somerville, which is a hundred years old, and they feel something special in that. Or they come to the Brattle, or the Coolidge—whether they're from Brooklyn, or from LA—and they really feel that we have these special places here, and you have a lot of civic pride about it. When you hear 'Oh, I had no clue that this is what Boston is like; I just pictured it being like The Town or Good Will Hunting,' they begin to see us more as we really are."

A couple of those enlightened visitors are Maine-based filmmakers Gita Pullapilly and Aron Gaudet, who will be on hand for the opening night film, Beneath the Harvest Sky (screening April 23 at the Somerville Theatre), their Maine-set movie featuring teens who long to move to Boston.

The closing night selection will be Mood Indigo (screening April 30 at the Coolidge Corner Theatre). Directed by Eternal Sunshine of the Spotless Mind filmmaker Michel Gondry, it stars Audrey Tautou as a woman who suffers an unusual illness stemming from a flower growing in her lungs.

In between are 25 other narrative features (including Boyhood, Richard Linklater's 12-years-in-the-making Sundance sensation, screening April 25 at the Somerville Theatre). But documentary films also make a strong showing. "We're a documentary town," Campbell says. Since three of the five nominees for Best Documentary during the most recent Oscars were from filmmakers who honed their craft in Boston, it's hard to argue with her assessment, or with the compelling list of 30 documentaries that IFFBoston is presenting, such as Fight Church (screening April 24 and 26 at the Somerville Theatre), which grapples with pastors who moonlight as MMA fighters.

In addition to the features, there will be eight packages of short films. Although both narrative and docs are equally represented here, there won't be any animation offerings.

"Everybody enjoys animated shorts, but the problem is that we're shorthanded this year," Campbell admits. "It's important to recognize that we are doing this with nothing. We don't even know if we're going to be able to put the festival on next year. And this is the story that we tell every year. There's a certain sense of desperation that we won't be able to continue doing this, and it's important that people know."

The usual core group of five volunteer staff (who all have day jobs, mind you) is down to three this year. Beyond Campbell and Tamm, there's spotlight-shunning associate director Judy Wong; former volunteer staffers Dan McCallum and Christine Harbaugh will rejoin them during the eight-day festival itself.

"It's been difficult," Campbell says with a sigh. "It feels like we are doing more with less every year, and it's not a game of Jenga that we can continue playing without help." ◆

FLIGHT CHECK

AN ORCHESTRAL SAVANT BRIDGES JAZZ AND CLASSICAL WORLDS WITH NATURAL INSTINCTS.

MARIA SCHNEIDER COULD HAVE AN inflated ego. A perennial poll winner as a bandleader, composer and arranger, she has earned Grammy Awards for her past three albums, spanning the categories of Large Jazz Ensemble Recording, Instrumental Composition and, most recently, Contemporary Classical Composition. Yet while her music soars to lofty places, her head stays in check.

"I tend to go into things without a lot of confidence," says the New York-based conductor of the 18-piece Maria Schneider Orchestra, which plays the Berklee Performance Center on April 26.

For 2013's Winter Morning Walks, a collaboration instigated by opera singer Dawn Upshaw, Schneider took an extra leap, crossing into the classical genre and writing for vocals and strings. She drew inspiration and lyrics from the poetry of Ted Kooser and Carlos Drummond de Andrade in composing two long-form pieces, recorded with separate chamber orchestras. "I was really nervous about it because it was such new territory for me," she says, "but I felt so in love with that poetry."

She found her own poetic footing in Winter Morning Walks, which soprano Upshaw will perform at Tanglewood's Seiji Ozawa Hall on July 23 with strings and Maria Schneider Orchestra veterans Scott Robinson (clarinet), Frank Kimbrough (piano) and Jay Anderson (bass). The full orchestra, Schneider's primary vehicle for two decades, also plays that hall on Aug. 24 before entering the studio to record its next album.

"I felt so in love with that poetry."

THE MARIA SCHNEIDER ORCHESTRA plays the Berklee Performance Center on April 26.

That album should follow in the vein of the orchestra's last release, 2007's Sky Blue, which gracefully shifts from playful, impressionistic threads of piano and accordion to majestic swells of brass—and even bird calls in the Grammy-winning paean to migration "Cerulean Skies." Minnesota native Schneider says two pieces for the upcoming album evoke the landscape of the Midwest, while another is inspired by birds-of-paradise.

It's not that she aims to write about birds, she says, but rather that a budding piece will evoke a particular feeling or imagery that she then develops. "I'm not very conscious about where my music is going and trying to break that mold," Schneider says. "I'm a believer that if you live a life that moves places, and if you write intelligently in response to your life and your inspirations, that your music reflects that in a natural way."

Orchestra members also affect the process, as she leaves open space to mix composition and improvisation, much like orchestrator Gil Evans did with Miles Davis. "I've come to love that on a soulful and spiritual level," says Schneider, who served as Evans' assistant in his final years. "Every night, the music morphs into something fresh and unique that belongs to all of us."

Schneider found her calling as a young girl, spending hours at the piano playing classical and popular music. Her mother bought songbooks of Cole Porter and George Gershwin for her birthdays and at Christmas. "Even though I didn't have a lot of exposure to jazz, I knew the whole standard tradition," she says. "What I loved more than perfecting my way of playing was blowing through tons of music. I was a really good sight-reader." She soon gravitated to composing, especially after being stunned by a teenage pianist who had won a Mozart competition. "I realized, if she's playing like that, I'll never have that," says Schneider, 53. "My interest was always more about what makes music sound the way it sounds and how can I create that."

As a college composition major, Schneider shied from dense, atonal classical music and drew closer to jazz, earning a master's degree from the Eastman School of Music before moving to New York. In 1992, she launched the Maria Schneider Jazz Orchestra, later dropping the "Jazz" because, she says, "I don't want people coming in with an expectation."

She worked as a music copyist during the orchestra's lean early years. And even with acclaim, Schneider says she still owes about half of the $200,000 budget for Winter Morning Walks. Frustrated with unauthorized music available for free online and streaming services that pay artists a pittance, she just testified before Congress about altering copyright law to fit the digital age.

Schneider sells her albums online through the fan-funding platform ArtistShare, rewarding supporters with extra content that documents the creative process. "If I didn't have ArtistShare, I would quit," she says. "I can't live on air." ◆

PALM BEACHED

HERE, THEY'VE GOT THEIR MIND ON THEIR MONEY AND THEIR MONEY IN THEIR HANDS.

A SMART, SARDONIC BOSTON REAL ESTATE developer said to me some time ago, "In Boston, I'm a rich old man. In Palm Beach, I'm a poor young one."

There are at least five truly insecure places in America: Beverly Hills, the East Side of New York, East Hampton, Palm Beach, Fla., and, probably coming in at number one, Washington, DC. But the last suffers from a different kind of insecurity. "What's my power base?" is Washington's obsession. "How rich am I?" is the killer in the other four. In Palm Beach especially, the number one topic on everyone's lips is money. It drives people crazy that the people at the next table have millions more than they have. The only asterisk on this subject may be the remnants of really old money, patricians who look better than anyone else ever could in Henry Poole blazers and no socks, who came to Palm Beach from Manhattan and Greenwich and Winnetka and Lake Forest and Oyster Bay. They're mostly oblivious to what's going on around them. And when they notice, they disapprove.

But if you are curious about the various tribes in America, Palm Beach is also loaded with characters, mavericks who enjoy irony, see the excesses and absurdities in society and are comfy in their own skin. These people are passionate about ideas and share them with me. They don't take Palm Beach seriously. They live there to be amused and, after years of hard work, to soak up some sunshine and let their opinions flow.

One of them is Billy, an old friend who divides his time between Palm Beach and Milan, where he teaches entrepreneurship to students. My energy expert for years, he was the first person back in the mid-1990s to preach to me about the huge energy demand that would eventually come from India and China. That's when oil was $30 a barrel.

"At least there are no Russian oligarchs here," Billy said. "They're everywhere else that's glitzy. But they'd have to pay U.S. taxes, and the oligarchs don't pay taxes. In Milan, they travel with bodyguards with guns. And they'll pay to shut down a store like Bulgari or Chanel for hours at a time, send their blond Natashas in to shop with the window blinds down. Palm Beach has enough American oligarchs to keep the stores busy in-season." Then Billy paused and ordered a Mozart vodka, neat but ice cold. "And don't mention Los Angeles to me," he added. "In LA, people rent everything; it's leveraged money. In Palm Beach, everyone can pay cash."

When he dropped me off after dinner, he affirmed his belief in mining companies for the future. "The meek may inherit the Earth someday," he said, "but not the mineral rights." He is in Palm Beach, but he itches for action that retirement can never provide.

My next character did college in three years, business school in one, and could really make numbers work in magical ways from an early age. "I've spent my life being the grit in the oyster, and I don't care what the world thinks," he said. "I have the sun on my bod and no state taxes. And I can tell the world to take a hike." He does that, but serves on nonprofit boards where he's valuable because he's not afraid to speak his mind, and he's generous to those who pay attention. Every loner has a soft spot, and they all secretly want to be loved. And envied, too.

Driving me to play golf, his Bluetooth buzzed. It was a young partner of his, calling about a flight to San Francisco that night to cement a deal. "By the way," he said, "what's the name of this company? And the name again of their biggest product?"

The young partner wasn't sure of the answer to either question. I thought outrage would ensue since they were flying out for a pitch the next day. "Oh well," he said on the phone, "we can hash this out on the plane."

"You're not nervous?" I said. "You didn't even know the name of the company?"

He cranked up his Bose sound system, playing Pachelbel, and calmly said, "In New York for years, ulcers, three heart operations, a marriage or two. I've done hundreds of deals and, after all this time, they're all like one another. Find the weakness, what makes them quiver on the other side, and zero in. If you act as if you don't need the deal, everyone loves and wants you."

We hit the golf club, one of the many high-end treats in Palm Beach, a town packed with tony stores and restaurants—but its people watching is free and can be the biggest treat of all. Coming out of Maus & Hoffman, a store on Worth Avenue with the best men's shoes I've ever seen outside of London, I saw a man walking a pig on a leash. You need to have a strong sense of yourself and a pile of money to have a pet pig. Or no money at all and a low sense of self. But on Worth Avenue, I figure it's the former.

"Find the weakness, what makes them quiver on the other side, and zero in."

One night, I came back late to my hotel and crashed a black-tie event thrown by a major bank for the leading mortgage producers. It was a flashback to the glory days before the meltdown in '08: costumes, flappers, gangsters, gun molls, slicked-back-haired masters of the universe. So much more real than the latest DiCaprio version of Gatsby. I watched an entertainer, a tap dancer, strut his stuff to boozy jazz. No one else paid any attention; they gabbed all through the act. I talked with him, sad about the rudeness. "I'm used to this down here," he said, "but the show goes on. They don't care."

I visited another hotel and went to their beach and pool one afternoon. An attendant had grown up in the North End, on Hanover Street. I asked him about the mood in Palm Beach. "Well," he said, "see those cabanas? They rent for about $1,600 a day. After the Bernie Madoff scandal, business dropped dead down here. Then people who never showed up before, locals, came in to rent them. They wanted to show the world that they weren't affected by Madoff, even if they were. The appearances are everything."

Fun to visit, but you miss the grit and sardonic honesty of Boston. ◆

DOG DAYS

CANINE COMMOTION REALLY BITES.

"ANIMALS IN THE HOUSE: I DON'T GET IT," said one of my friends when we first got a dog. I tried to explain how rewarding it is to have a dog, this furry creature that loves you unconditionally and fills your life with moments of sudden joy. "They track feces into the house," he replied. Look, I won't try to argue with someone who irrationally hates dogs.

But now, nine years later, I'm coming around to the viewpoint of the non-pet people. It's not that I'm anti-dog, but you might say that I'm anti-dog friendly. If you don't have a dog and don't want one, I can certainly understand.

We have two dogs, Manny and Dino, a retriever-ish mutt and a lowrider basset-lab. We also now have two children under the age of 4, and therein you'll find the headwaters of our discontent. When you have dogs that predate your human children, the dogs develop a rivalry with the kids. The dogs know how much attention they used to get, they see where that attention is going now and they don't like it. This complicates your life, which at this stage doesn't need any additional complication.

I think I read somewhere that dogs have the emotional intelligence of a 2-year-old. So if you have two dogs plus an actual 2-year-old, that's a lot of whining, jealousy and irrational behavior. On top of that, these two toddler-brained creatures also happen to weigh 50 or 60 pounds and have claws and pointy teeth. By about the 50th time that a dog creeps up to snatch food out of your kid's hand like a shark emerging from the watery deep, you'll be all set with dogs.

As my friend pointed out, they track mud (and worse) into the house. We used to let them sit with us on the couch until Dino developed a habit of raking his claws across the spot where he planned to sit, as if inspecting it for booby traps. Now we put pressure-sensitive alarms on the couch whenever we leave. The acrobatic jewel thief from Ocean's Twelve couldn't get onto that thing without waking up the neighborhood.

At night, Manny licks his lips, even though I'm not entirely sure dogs have lips. In any case, when he's down there at the foot of the bed air-smooching at 1 am, you want to stuff his snout into a vat of ChapStick so he'll stop smacking his chops. Meanwhile Dino, despite having nostrils the size of the Ted Williams Tunnel, snores constantly. So there we are each night, Manny licking his lips and Dino violating Bernoulli's principle while Heather and I cram pillows over our heads to muffle the canine cacophony. Sometimes Dino mixes it up with a midnight stroll around the house, his claws clacking on the hardwood like Shaq playing Dance Dance Revolution in tap shoes.

When Dino barks in your face, you're pretty sure that his breath comes from somewhere in his butt. Bones seemed to help, but we stopped giving him bones after finding a soggy half-eaten hunk of rawhide stashed under one of our bedroom pillows.

We expected Manny to slow down as he turned into an old dog, but we're still waiting for any sign of mellowness. Now, at 10 years old, he has no gray fur and is still a hyper freak when the mood grabs him. When he's off the leash, he likes to sprint full tilt right at you, blowing past just inches away like an F/A-18 buzzing the tower. Unfortunately, the one indication of his dog-year geriatrics is a cataract that's gradually rendered him blind in his left eye, which makes his precision flybys considerably more perilous. The key is not to flinch after he's fixed your position with his good eye, but try to resist flinching when Sammy Davis Jr. is riding a dirt bike right at you at 50 mph.

If you have two dogs plus an actual 2-year-old, that's a lot of whining, jealousy and irrational behavior.

Dogs aren't cheap, either. Right now, they're both due for Bordetella booster shots. Didn't they just get those? Or am I thinking of the rabies shots or heartworm pills or ear medication or special Rachael Ray dog food? Oh, all of the above. Not to mention that when we moved to a new house, we had to have a fence built to keep them in the yard. I buy special heavy-duty trash bags to corral their heavy doodies. Manny likes to eat dirt, which requires me to buy grass seed. There's dog shampoo, dog nail clippers and dog sitting. The list is endless. Maintenance-wise, it would probably be cheaper to own a pair of classic Ferraris.

Despite all this, I know I'll be sad when they're gone. Once that day arrives and the question of animals in the house returns, I'm not sure where I'll stand. But I hear fish are nice. ◆

SPOCK TAKES STOCK

WE ATTEMPT A VULCAN MIND MELD WITH THE ACCOMPLISHED ACTOR.

ICONIC ACTOR LEONARD NIMOY, 83, WAS BORN AND RAISED in Boston's West End and now lives in Los Angeles. He served in the Army before briefly studying acting at Boston College in the 1950s. His earliest acting roles were on TV shows like Dragnet and Perry Mason, and he achieved staggering fame playing Spock in the Star Trek TV and film series. (His two autobiographies are titled I Am Not Spock and I Am Spock.) He went on to star in Mission: Impossible and host the popular series In Search of..., and his extensive voice-over credits include documentary films, TV commercials, cartoons and a memorable introduction for the Museum of Science's Mugar Omni Theater. He is also an accomplished fine art photographer whose latest show, Secret Selves, is on view through May 9 in the Sherman Gallery at Boston University. And on May 23 and 24, he will appear with the Boston Pops in a space-themed program at Symphony Hall.

JONATHAN SOROFF: Most vivid memory of growing up in the West End?
LEONARD NIMOY: Playing stickball in the middle of the street. I really am, deeply, at heart, still a Bostonian, and I come back as often as I can.

I know a lot of photographers who say all the new technology has taken the artistry out of it. How do you feel about that? There's a certain kind of truth to that, and I'm sure people who were making a living shooting various events are no longer getting calls, because everyone has a camera. But the kind of photography that captured my imagination was thematic photography, and that's entirely different. I'd already been carrying cameras with me and taking pictures before I studied photography seriously in the 1970s at UCLA, and then I learned the difference between just shooting pictures and exploring a theme.

So who DID put the bomp in the bomp-she-bomp? Am I supposed to know the answer to that question? [Laughs]

Yes! It was part of your voice-over for the Museum of Science's IMAX theater, when they demonstrated the sound system. Interesting. That expression came up a few weeks ago, and I had no idea what the person was talking about. Listen, I have trouble remembering what I had for breakfast today. I did that recording 20 years ago.

With the voice-over thing, you must have an ongoing feud with James Earl Jones and Morgan Freeman, no? [Laughs] That's very flattering. Those guys are great. They speak and perform intelligently, and they have great voices that demand attention.

Do you do anything special to protect your voice? No. My voice is a gift. My speech is something else. When I left Boston, I had a very identifiable accent, and I went to school in Pasadena at what was then the Pasadena Playhouse School to lose it. They had an excellent speech program.

You did episodes of Dragnet, Perry Mason and The Twilight Zone. In those early days of TV, did you have any sense that you were pioneering a medium that would change the world? No. I wasn't thinking in those cosmic terms. I was just happy to have another job. I was hungry for work.

"There were people who actually thought they'd found an actor with pointed ears..."

Something people would be surprised to learn about you? I'm tempted to say something silly like "He doesn't actually have pointed ears." Believe it or not, when I first went on the air as Spock in 1966, I hadn't had a lot of exposure, and there were people who actually thought they'd found an actor with pointed ears to play the role.

Strangest Trekkie encounter? Well, it was both funny and sad. I met a young lady once who said her friend had lost his vision in one eye and was losing it in the other, and he was in the hospital. She asked if I could please come see if I could help. And I told her, "I'm terribly sorry, but I'm an actor. I do not have that kind of power." And she said, "How do you know if you won't even try?"

Is Zachary Quinto hotter than George Takei? [Laughs] George is terrific. A great character and a good friend, and I love his irreverent attitude about everything. He's very funny and very, very bright. I'm on Twitter, so I do see his stuff from time to time. On the other hand, Zachary Quinto is a very intelligent, thoughtful, accomplished actor whom I admire a lot, and we're good friends. We see each other whenever we can. We saw him in his brilliant performance of The Glass Menagerie on Broadway, and we even saw it before that at the A.R.T. in Cambridge.

Favorite William Shatner anecdote? Oh, God. He can speak for himself.

Did the Bruno Mars video give you renewed cred with your grandkids? [Laughs] My stepson, Aaron Bay-Schuck, is an executive at Atlantic Records, and that came about because of him. He brought Bruno Mars to Atlantic. I thought the video was very clever and well done.

How's your Yiddish these days? Pretty good. I had a fairly lengthy conversation with the woman who runs the National Yiddish Book Center in Amherst, Mass. They've put pieces of it out on YouTube, and just two days ago, I was with my brother, who's 87 years old, and he complimented me on my Yiddish. I asked how he knew, and he said, "I saw it on YouTube."

So give me a little taste. OK. [Proceeds to recite Hamlet's "To be or not to be" soliloquy in Yiddish.]

Awesome! So are you or are you not Spock? Oh, I am. I am. Definitely.

I have a favor to ask. Will you record my voicemail message? I get paid a lot of money for that! [Laughs] OK. Here goes: This is Leonard Nimoy. Jonathan can't come to the phone right now. Live long and prosper. ◆

If you're old enough to remember Boston bars before the advent of Cambridge's storied B-Side Lounge, you might recognize that we're enjoying a Very Good Drinking Moment right now.

PHOTOGRAPHED BY ADAM DETOUR

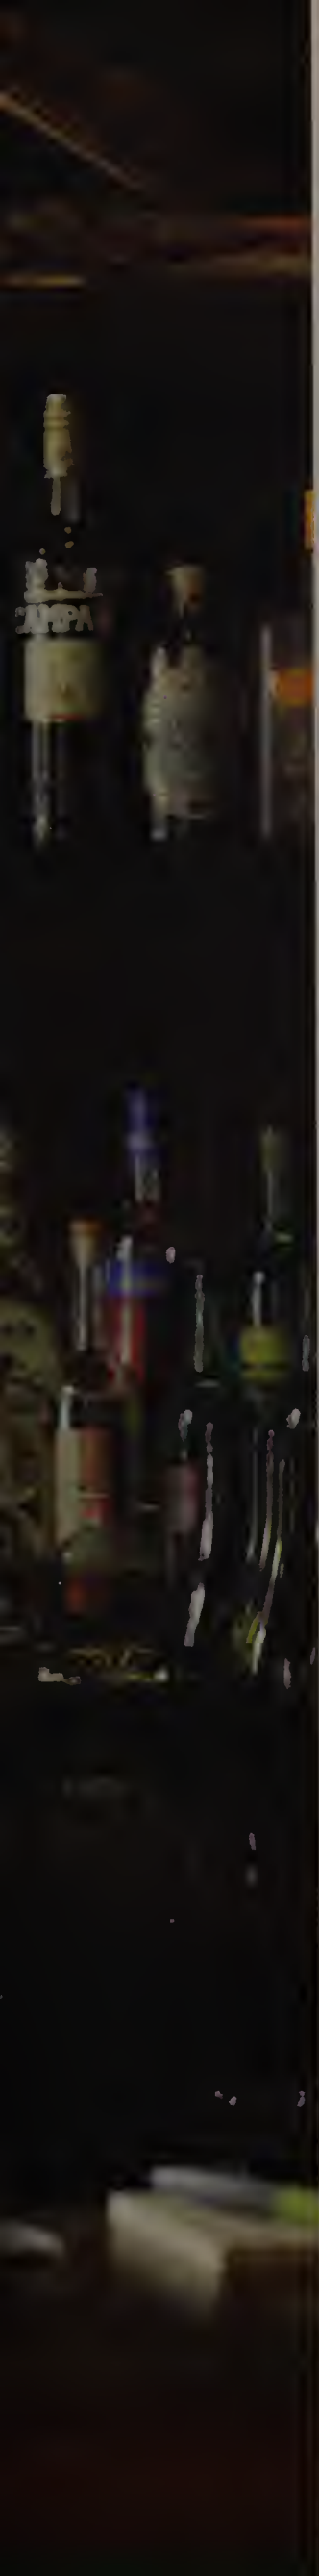
TYLER JAY WANG



Finding a bar with carefully made cocktails, a well-curated wine list and a dazzling assortment of small-producer craft beers no longer requires a special trip: Chances are you've got one in your neighborhood. Veterans of Boston's older craft bars (many of whom passed through the B-Side's ranks) have moved on to open or manage great new ones. Better yet, they're training a new generation of young talent to embody their long-honed virtues of studiousness, technical virtuosity and commitment to hospitality.

This year's spotlight aims to capture this fortunate moment, offering a glimpse into the psyches (and hangover remedies) of a dozen worthy local bartenders. Some are seasoned pros with already-glowing reputations; others are relative newcomers who have shown enough promise to get situated among the city's best bar programs. We've asked them what spirits are currently fueling their fires, where they drink when they're off the clock and what code words they use to mark you as needing a cab home. Get to know them; you're going to want to find a stool in front of them very soon.

What does a customer get dining at your bar that they might miss sitting in the dining room? At the Kirkland [where Wang most recently worked], Tony Maws' open kitchen is always a great show; it's the only time I ever felt like no one was watching me. But even with a spectacle behind you, the relationship between guest and bartender is always more personal than at a table. That's why I always sit at the bar, and one of the reasons I became a bartender.

Cocktail more customers should order? Anything with gin. The craft-spirit movement is producing some wonderful New World gins. Try a Tom Collins: It's familiar, but when made right really stands out.

Cocktail that must die? Dirty martinis. Why do you want leftover waste from old olives in your cocktail?

Prized bartending accoutrement? A muddler my dad made from Osage orange wood.

Worst customer habit? "Can I have [house cocktail] but with vodka, and just a little bit of citrus, and not too sweet, but also, like, a splash of grenadine?"

End-of-shift drink? A stout and a shot; a Sazerac on Sundays.

Last great meal out? Per Se; it was just perfect. On second thought, Ribelle.

Hangover cure? Don't drink so much, dummy.

Dumbest trend? Stocking every whiskey or amaro ever produced. Curate those lists a little!

Your bar bucket list? Bar High Five (Tokyo), Polite Provisions (San Diego) and wherever Scott Marshall is working. [Author's note: For the curious, the brilliant Scott Marshall is now at 22 Square in Savannah, Ga.]

Life skill that bartending has taught you? Sweat the small stuff, make it perfect, and then say f---it and take it like a shot.

DAN VALACHOVIC
Vee Vee

Vee Vee's focus on local craft brews has been widely imitated and increasingly appreciated. How have the changes in what's available and what customers want affected your philosophy? More customers are learning to trust what we put on our draft list. I actually like the idea of paring our list back rather than adding more. We have four draft lines and maybe 20 bottles; it's fun and challenging to curate those lists in a way that is interesting and exciting, with no fluff or filler.

Prized bartending accoutrement? The keg fridge I built in my home cellar.

Beer more customers should try? Beers fermented with Brettanomyces, which can lend a rare, tropical, funky complexity. An example is Orval Belgian Trappist ale, which gets a second in-bottle fermentation with Brett. A young Orval has a different flavor profile from one aged several months.

In-house code words? "I need you to barback seat six for me" means "What's that customer's name again?"

Guilty pleasure? Nothing beats a shandy at the beach. Narragansett and [RI frozen lemonade maker] Del's are allegedly teaming up on one this year, which sounds awesome.

Inspirational beer bar? 't Velootje (Ghent, Belgium). No heat in winter, just a rubbish-burning fireplace, and no beer list, just the owner pouring you what he happens to have that day.

MOIRA COSTELLO HORAN
Commonwealth Cambridge, Franklin Southie, Citizen Public House

A professional bartender has a vampiric lifestyle: You don't see a lot of daylight. How do you manage a social life? Any upside to a night-owl existence? No traffic and no lines at the supermarket, bars and restaurants. Restaurants become your family, so you spend holidays with people you love and care about. I don't have many friends who aren't in the industry; my boyfriend is a bartender, so we understand each other's schedule. Being so social in my profession makes me happy just to be on my couch and quiet on my own time.

Measure or free-pour? Measure cocktails, free-pour mixed drinks.

Cocktail that more customers should order? Gin martinis with a twist.

Cocktail that must die? Dirty vodka martinis. They're disgusting.

It's fun to watch someone's palate evolve, and I think we're promoting that in a cool, comfortable way.

Favorite current trend? Brewers doing subtle variations on a style. Trillium and Mystic are tweaking standards of theirs just slightly to emphasize different hops, grains or yeasts.

Dumbest trend? Yuengling

What should other bars do better? List serving sizes and ABV of beers on beer menus.

Your bar bucket list? Craft Pride (Austin), a year-old bar with 54 lines of Texas-only craft beers and a bacon food truck on the patio.

Worst customer habits? Waving in my face, interrupting me when I'm talking to someone else, or giving me a drink order when I ask you how you're doing.

Ingredient more customers should try? Gin: such a versatile spirit. Too many people avoid it based on one bad experience in their youth.

End-of-shift drink? A shot of Rittenhouse rye and a Notch Pils, please.

Guilty pleasure? Piña coladas. I used to live and bartend in Puerto Rico.

Last great meal out? Sarma. Delicious. Great staff. Can't wait to go back.

Favorite dives? Tom English's on Dot Ave. Whitcy's. Delux before it closed.

Hangover cure? Pedialyte and Green Chartreuse. [Author's note: I assume separately, not mixed.]

Favorite current trend? Amaro-based cocktails.

Favorite bar now? Tavern Road—every bartender there is amazingly talented.

Nomination for Boston's Bartending Hall of Fame? Peter Cipriani [of the Franklin Southie and Franklin Cafe]. He is the whole package.

Your most important mentor? The legendary Tom Mastricola [GM of Commonwealth].

Life skill bartending has taught you? Patience.

LIBBY SPENCER
Deep Ellum, Lone Star Taco Bar

I'm grateful that Deep Ellum and Lone Star have brought a top-tier craft cocktail program to Allston, but spirits-drinking Allstonians still seem more into highballs. How do you graduate the cool kids to more sophisticated, challenging tipples? We're getting there. I always push the kids to taste new beers or let me make them a cocktail. It's fun to watch someone's palate evolve, and I think we're promoting that in a cool, comfortable way.

Cocktail more customers should order? Manhattans. So many great variations, and an easy way to try new whiskeys.

Prized accoutrement? A Mr. Boston guide from the 1940s, a fun reference and research tool.

Worst customer habit? Making out at my bar. Just don't.

Ingredient more customers should try? Mezcal, neat or in a gimlet.

Best time to talk to you? Tuesdays after 11 pm at Lone Star; Thursdays after midnight at Deep Ellum.

Mobile Mixology

Cocktail caterers are bringing the bar home.

BY NANCY GAINES

Drinks once got short shrift from party givers. As long as the liquid was plentiful, a punch bowl or keg could suffice as backdrop for a feast. But now, thanks to the growing demand for sophisticated drinks, special occasions may entail hiring not just a caterer, but a bartender who will customize the evening's libations. Meet some mobile operators who let the cocktails come to you.

Two-year-old "spirit alchemy" business Booze Époque has catered parties in gardens and galleries, homes and function halls, but it was born in an especially unexpected setting. Co-owners Meaghan Sinclair and Harmony Kelly founded their "whimsical" drink catering company after creating "a fully functional bar in the middle of the Nevada desert as an art project for the Burning Man festival," Sinclair explains. "We wanted to allow people to experience what the guests at our ephemeral desert bar had experienced—beautiful cocktails with fresh ingredients delivered directly to their doors." Emphasizing local, organic and seasonal ingredients in their catering work (parties start at $600), they also teach classes at Somerville's Kitchen Inc. and offer in-home instruction—followed by sampling, of course—in signature cocktail making, tailored for small groups or celebrations. "We explore some of the more unusual ingredients used in boutique bartending, and then open the class to experimentation and play," Sinclair says. Other classes in their repertoire include the astrologically themed Cocktails of the Stars (Kelly is also a practicing psychic) and Cocktails and Literature, featuring everything from wassail bowls harking back to Shakespearean works to a futuristic blend invoking the Pan Galactic Gargle Blaster from Douglas Adams' The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy.

Flask & Funnel is the year-old brainchild of Andrew Fatato, a former apprentice at Drink, Barbara Lynch's Fort Point boite, where he worked with master mixologist John Gertsen. "The majority of my hands-on experience was from Drink," Fatato says. "John and I were a team. And I learned a lot of technique goes into throwing a cocktail party every night." He now gives in-home classes in mixology that "turn into a cocktail party at the end," and he's leading a lesson at the Farm & Fable teaching kitchen in the South End this month. But the bulk of his business is providing ingredients and service for private parties, priced at about $15-$20 per guest per hour. The transition from working at one of the most well-equipped bars in the country to running a one-man show had its challenges. "I knew about systems from Drink," Fatato explains, "but had to learn about ordering, sourcing and pacing." But one common thread between his former workplace and his current venture is the emphasis on tailoring the cocktail to the customer. "I love to create bespoke cocktail recipes for each party," says Fatato, who also explores tools, techniques and lesser-known tipples like the Knickerbocker and the White Lion on his blog. "Because I'm so interested in the craft, I love to explain the technique." But in the end, he says, "hospitality is the focus."

Three years ago, as he watched the food truck trend escalate, Lance Davis had a brainstorm. He had recently renovated an Airstream trailer for his personal use, "like a high-end motel room," he explains. A wine consultant, he also spent lots of time in bars and restaurants. "I began to see a need for a different type of lounge bar in the event industry, and the light bulb went off," Davis says. "A retro-fitted Airstream would be a cool event space." With friend and neighbor Graham McKissock, a general contractor, Davis bought and revamped a 31-foot-long 1983 Airstream. Two years ago, the pair launched Hive, a mobile full-service bar and lounge space. They already have 12-15 events booked for this summer, says Davis, who serves as bartender along with McKissock, but will hire extra help for large gatherings. Their events are mostly held outdoors, on beaches or in fields, although the Airstream can "go anywhere" and has been parked for parties under overhangs, in garages or "any unique setting where you can fill it up," he says. "We develop everything, start to finish, working with you on high-end cocktails, craft beer and fine wines." Pricing runs from $2,000 to $4,000 for the trailer (depending on the season), plus drink costs, which Davis says can range widely, "from Bud Light to Cristal."

Guilty pleasure? Vodka and Red Bull.

Last great meal out? Strip-T's. Love the grilled romaine salad with braised oxtail and a poached egg. I'm obsessed with that place.

Favorite dives? The Sil' [The Silhouette Lounge] and the Model in Allston, Galway House and the Drinking Fountain in JP, Charlie's Kitchen and Grendel's Den in Harvard Square.

Hangover cure? Eggs, bacon, home fries, toast and a Bloody. Works every time!

Favorite current trend? Wild yeasts and sour beers.

Favorite bar now? Highland Kitchen. I can go there to party with my girlfriends, have date night or bring my parents for dinner.

Hall of Fame nomination? [Deep Ellum/Lone Star GM] David Cagle, aka Cousin Dave.

Life skill bartending has taught you? I can talk to anyone about anything—and I'm really great at eavesdropping!

MELINDA MADDOX
Backbar

Maybe it's the location, but if there's one place my cocktail-geek friends have overlooked, it's Backbar. What makes Backbar worth the considerable effort to find its front door? Backbar is located off a random driveway, behind a bunch of dumpsters, down a weirdly lit hallway. Once you find us, you'll realize we are unpretentious, make cool cocktails and have a uniquely chill attitude. I want to serve guests something that gains their trust and makes them excited to be here. Sometimes that means I get to light cocktails on fire or smash the heck out of some ice!

Measure or free-pour? Jiggers always, except for finger-stirred Negroni Mondays.

Cocktail that you wish more customers would order? The Scofflaw.

Prized accoutrement? Cocktail Techniques by Kazuo Uyeda.

Most embarrassing moment? I've been punched into a bloody nose by an overzealous co-worker's cocktail shaking.

Guilty pleasure? Baileys on the rocks with a Guinness back.

Favorite dives? The Mount Vernon (Somerville) is super old-school, staffed by ancient bartenders in black vests and bow ties. I need to try their martini machine.

Favorite current trend? Cocktails on tap, and coffee brewing techniques applied to cocktail making.

What should other bars do better? Don't make assumptions about me, like that I might want a "girly" drink.

Favorite bar now? jm Curley.

Your bar bucket list? Experimental Cocktail Club (Paris), Bourbon & Branch (San Francisco), Bar K (Osaka).

Dumbest Yelp? That my hair was messy.

Life skill bartending has taught you? I can relate to just about everyone, and I will always be able to find work in a restaurant or bar if I am willing to work hard.

NICOLE LECLAIR
jm Curley

What's the hardest aspect of being a relatively new bartender in a place that has so much going on: craft cocktails, a geeky beer list, serious wines and a long food menu? Absorbing new information. If I make or taste something, I remember it better. Just reading can feel like I'm faking it. I want to give people my opinion, not one I got secondhand.

Drink more customers should order? Negroni Sbagliato.

Prized bartending accoutrement? Tiki mugs from Bali Hai.

Worst customer habit? People grabbing me to look at my tattoos.

Ingredient more customers should try? Amari and sweet vermouths like Montenegro and Carpano Antica.

Best time to talk to you? Thursday afternoon.

In-house code words? Jack Monkey (idiot), Meat Pie (terrible mess), Bear Trap (someone you can't escape).

Media recommendation? Rye Pines' A Portrait of Dissonance as a Young Man, a great album by a local band I never get to see because of work.

Guilty pleasure? Anything from a blender. Miller Lite in a Vortex bottle.

Favorite dive? Charlie's Kitchen.

Hangover cure? Two showers, a towel nap, coffee, ginger ale with bitters.

Favorite current trend? Cocktails on draft and in bottles.

Dumbest trend? Mason jars.

Favorite bar now? State Park. I could take anyone I know there and have a good time.

Dumbest Yelp? Mocking my eyeglasses. Is my poor vision really affecting your experience?

FREDERIC YARM

FREDERIC YARM
Russell House Tavern

You may be better known for your Cocktail Virgin blog and 2012 book Drink & Tell: A Boston Cocktail Book than as a bartender. How has being a prolific cocktail writer shaped your bartending, and vice versa? Sitting at lots of bars has influenced my bartending more than my writing—observing good and bad hospitality, techniques, recipes and interactions. Manning the stick professionally has made me a more easygoing guest.

Cocktail that more customers should order? Cocktails with vermouth; I like a 2:1 or 1:1 martini at home. Vermouth and other aromatized wines are also a delight to drink on the rocks with an orange twist.

Cocktail that must die? "Those '70s drinks." I refuse to remember the difference between a Bay Breeze and a Sea Breeze.

Prized bartending accoutrement? My CME Handworks inlaid three-wood ice-crushing mallet, actually a furniture maker's woodcarving mallet. It's beautiful.

Trickiest moment? Dealing with the (rare) disruptive, aggressive customer, the kind that makes other guests uncomfortable. It's difficult to switch from hospitality to authoritarian mode.

Guilty pleasure? A Rusty Nail, though it's a legitimate-enough drink.

Favorite dives? Paddy's Lunch, Charlie's Kitchen.

What should other bars do better? Turn over their cocktail menus. A static menu betrays a lack of focus.

Advice for aspiring bartenders? Two quotes neatly encapsulate the profession for me. [Back-bar manager] Sam Treadway: "Bartending is about watering down spirits and babysitting adults." [Drink GM] John Gertsen: "If you know where everything lives and know how to smile, you'll be a great bartender."

MARKUS YAO
Shojo

Shojo is a lonely purveyor of craft cocktails in Chinatown. Who are your customers, and when will other Chinatown restaurateurs get as serious about drinks as you guys? We get locals or people from all over, including the PRC. Unfortunately, Chinatown doesn't have many full liquor licenses.

Spirit more customers should order? Japanese whiskies.

Cocktail that must die? The Last Word.

Best time to talk to you? Anytime but five minutes before closing.

Any in-house code words? We speak Chinese in front of customers: No code needed!

Favorite dives? Casino bars: $1 beer and whiskey, though you have to play table games.

Favorite current trend? The Instagram Negroni: It's a Negroni posted on Instagram.

Dumbest trend? The Instagram Negroni.

EZRA STAR

Dumbest Yelp? Yelpers are the best people on the planet. They have tasted every known thing. That's why they Yelp, right?

Advice to aspiring bartenders? See the world.

Your most important mentors? [Silvertone bartender] Nick Korn: "Fat is happy." Also, [Spike TV's Bar Rescue host] Jon Taffer: "How the eff is that workin' out for you?"

Any other words of wisdom? "There's no strong whiskey, just weak men."

Drink

Drink always seems to have dense crowds and lines out the door. How do you balance high-volume service with the ideal of a personalized cocktail experience? It can be very difficult, especially in a place that doesn't have a menu. The first way I deal with this is to not think about making drinks. The more focused I can be on the people at my bar, the better.

"It looks pretty badass sticking out of my bag. I feel like an Edo-period samurai walking through the city."

Cocktail more customers should order? Brandy-based drinks, especially for women. When someone claims to not like whiskey, I can surprise them with a brandy cocktail, and they usually love it.

Prized bartending accoutrement? My ice saw: I engraved stars on it to mark it as my own. Plus, it looks pretty badass sticking out of my bag. I feel like an Edo-period samurai walking through the city.

Most embarrassing moment? While making a Ramos gin fizz, the shaker slid from my hand and covered a customer in cream and egg. She was

To Serve, With Love

One of Boston's most storied bar stars isn't technically a bartender.

BY NANCY GAINES

"WHEN I STARTED, PEOPLE DIDN'T EVEN KNOW wine existed," says Boston's dean of drink servers, Carlos Villalobos, a 42-year veteran of the hotel bar at the Ritz-Carlton and its successor, the Taj. "It all was martinis: gin martinis, with lemon peel, of course. The three-martini lunch was normal. Now everything is vodka—with olives!—and special beers. Everybody is experimenting with new drinks. Even margaritas have a last name."

Carlos—one of those legends in their own time known by a single name—is not technically a bartender. He is a waiter in formal evening wear, the bar's arbiter of how to seat, serve and schmooze the customer. Nonetheless, he was showcased in a GQ feature on the Ritz bar and cited as a "barman" extraordinaire in a Forbes article that memorialized his famous dictate for a martini: Stir "12 times, not 11, not 13."

Now 68 and deflecting questions about retirement, Carlos remains trim and energetic, with deep dimples and an elegant accent from his native Chile, which he left for Boston at age 24. He interviewed with corporations like John Hancock and Bank of Boston, but ended up at the Ritz while he was waiting for word back. (The bank's chief economist, a bar regular, later begged Carlos to come work for him. He declined.) "I had no money, and I was walking past this hotel and said, 'I'll give it a try.' I asked the doorman about jobs," Carlos recalls. "He looked down his long nose at me and said, 'Go to the entrance through the alley.' I didn't know anything about the Ritz-Carlton. I didn't know how exquisite it was. I just walked into the hotel and asked for a job."

Carlos laughs, a tad rueful. From a tender age, he had an innate pride that grew into a professional equipoise. For sure, he doesn't take slights, from bosses or customers, but remains relentlessly engaging. "I stayed at this job because I wasn't treated like a server. I came to know so many people, so much fun, so educated and sophisticated, who talked about such interesting things. We were ladies and gentlemen serving ladies and gentlemen. Now it's their sons and daughters, and it's a different story. More relaxed, but more average."

Indeed, the Ritz bar, which opened at the end of Prohibition, was fabled for its strictures, and Carlos was often the polite enforcer. Although it attracted merchant princes, celebrities and advertising and media moguls, well into the '90s guest were forbidden to table hop or send a drink to someone at another table. Unescorted women weren't allowed inside until 1970. There were no jeans, no sneakers, no caps; men had to wear a tie and jacket (which Carlos would happily provide from the bar's stash). The insistence on ties was relaxed in the late '80s, to the distress of most regulars—even the man who was once told he had to leave because his son wasn't wearing a tie. ("Of course he isn't. He's 3," the man initially protested.) The jeans and sneakers ban was dropped in 1995 with the influx of foreign tourists wearing "dungarees that cost more than suits," as one Ritz veteran said.

The house rules led to some of Carlos' most memorable moments. "I had to refuse to let Michael Caine in. He was impeccably dressed but wearing jeans. Pressed and perfect, but jeans. Not allowed. When I asked him to leave, he almost lost it. But he recovered and left. I felt so bad," he recalls.

Then there was the occasion a few years ago when Matt Damon came in wearing a baseball cap. "I had to say, 'I can't sit you,'" Carlos says. "I asked him to remove it. He hesitated and we started talking, and he learned I had a daughter, a fan. He asked me for a piece of paper and wrote a note to her that said he met me and wished the best for her." Then he removed his cap and sat down.

Beyond attire, Carlos says, changed habits include calls for fancy-pants spirits instead of the noble "Scotch on the rocks," lots of beer and a more diverse clientele. Atavistic gender restrictions had ebbed by the time George Clooney came in a few years ago, accompanied by six or seven women. "He was the only man," says Carlos, who served them. "He came up to the bar to order and was really charming. Such charisma. We talked one on one, and I want to tell you, I was impressed." But Carlos, a model of discretion, just "can't remember" what they said. From neckties and highballs to flannel and elderflower liqueur, bar trends change, but old standards like keeping confidences still apply. And Carlos carries on. ◆ rcally nice about it, though I doubt she'll ever order another onc.

Best time to talk cocktails? 4 pm on Tuesday, Wednesday or Thursday.

In-house code words? "In the pool": someone only getting water or too drunk to have drinks.

Guilty pleasure? Apricot sour: two ounces Rothman & Winter Orchard Apricot liqueur, half-ounce simple syrup, half-ounce lemon. So good, so sweet, so wrong.

Last great meal out? Fairsted Kitchen; I was blown away by what they are doing over there!

Hangover cure? After the occasional night of hard drinking, a salt-rimmed Italian Greyhound and a bowl of pho help get me through the workday.

What should other bars do better? Improve their sound systems and soundproofing.

Dumbest Yelp? "They have a line to get in. Why don't they just let more people in?"

Fairsted Kitchen

I've praised Fairsted for its extraordinary hospitality ethos and often say that hospitality is as important in bartending as technical chops. How does Fairsted cultivate it? If someone wants to make a career in this industry, hospitality should be the first priority. I've always loved meeting new people and interacting with many different personalities; it's cool to have a job where I do that nightly. Fairsted's owners want every guest to feel as though they're eating and drinking with family. That only works because we have that sensibility as a staff.

Drink more customers should order? Vieux Carré.

Most embarrassing moment? A couple at my bar got into a huge argument and proceeded to start their divorce over dinner. I gave them a couple of shots and told them to love each other. The woman immediately started crying and left. Whoops.

Ingredient more customers should try? Rum and rhum agricole.

In-house code words? "Getting Crowed": We treat our VIP guests to a shot of Old Crow Reserve.

Media recommendation? Esquire's Handbook for Hosts (1953), on how to be the life of any party.

Guilty pleasure? Daiquiris all around, please.

Favorite current trend? Bottled cocktails and beer cocktails.

What should other bars do better? Focus more on helping me have a great time, less on feeding me information. I'm mostly there to drink and eat, not to be educated.

Your bar bucket list? Bar High Five (Tokyo). Two I've already hit: the Floridita and Bodeguita del Medio, both in Havana. The bartender at Bodeguita said, "Here is the first mojito you have ever had; all the rest have been merely an imitation." Paired with a Cohiba, it was the best bar experience I've ever had.

KEVIN MABRY
Merrill & Co.

What went smoother or rougher about Merrill's recent opening than you expected? Opening a bar isn't supposed to be easy. The hours arc long, thc work is tedious and the risk is high. Wc never know if all the effort and money invested is going to yield a return. But I love being a part of an opening team: the creativity, the team-building, executing a new concept top-to-bottom. A restaurateur friend and I agree: It's like an addiction, an emotional thrill unlike any other.

Spirit that must die? Fireball cinnamon whiskey.

Spirit more customers should try? Gran Classico amaro. It's in my Negronis, my secret weapon.

Prized bartending accoutrement? Antique glassware. I could never live on the West Coast for fear of earthquakes knocking them off my shelves.

In-house code words? "Team Meeting": a staff half-shot of Fernet to get our minds right.

Guilty pleasure? White Russians! I don't care who sees me drinking them.

Last great meal out? Alden & Harlow.

Hangover cure? An ice-cold V8, an egg sandwich and a shot of mezcal, not necessarily in that order.

Favorite current trends? Sherries and session IPAs.

What should other bars do better? Educate your staff. For instance, all spirits you stir; any citrus you shake. I'm a shaken Negroni away from a meltdown.

Favorite bar now? Backbar.

Your bar bucket list? Artesian (London), Aviary (Chicago), Canon (Seattle), Anvil (Houston) and Polite Provisions (San Diego).

Dumbest Yelp? "The staff being in Ed Hardy did not add up." I was that server, and I don't do bedazzled or dragons.

"Focus more on helping me have a great time, less on feeding me information. I'm mostly there to drink and eat, not to be educated."

What does hospitality mean to you? A series of selfless acts that reflect genuine caring about others: not just the guests, but your co-workers, friends and family, too. Hospitality should not be something you punch in and out of.

RYAN MCGRALE
Tavern Road

You've logged more time in New York City bars than most Boston bartenders. Any stories? My very last bar shift in Manhattan, the place was slammed. Some Jersey dude was waving his credit card and cash at the end of the bar, then started snapping his fingers. I got on all fours, walked down the bar, jumped onto the bar in front of the guy, crouched down, cupped his face in my hands, licked the side of it and said, "We are here to serve you as best we can. We are people, not dogs. Don't you ever dare snap at anyone who serves you." Then I hopped off the bar and took his order. The crowd started cheering like crazy. He smiled and said, "You're right, I'm sorry, never again in this or any bar!" Then he and I had a shot together, and the night continued as it started.

Prized bartending accoutrement? First-edition The Bon Vivant's Companion by Jerry Thomas.

Worst customer habits? Yelling drink orders at the bartender while he's making other drinks, taking another drink order or interacting with another guest.

Ingredient more customers should try? Sherry, as in the perfect Bamboo cocktail.

Guilty pleasure? No shame, but a NASCAR Spritz: Bud Light Lime dosed with Aperol and a lemon twist.

Last great meal out? Erbaluce.

Favorites dives? Delux (RIP), Anchovies, the Field.

Favorite current trend? Mists and foams.

Dumbest trend? Cocktail competitions, except the Cocktail Wars and World Class contests.

Favorite bar now? The underrated Blue Dragon.

Dumbest Yelp? That I literally had to be on drugs to like my job this much.

Your greatest bartending moment? I introduced two strangers sitting at my bar, involved them in conversation. They started dating, married, had a child six years later. His middle name is Ryan. ◆

METRO BOSTON'S COLORFUL GUIDE TO ENTERTAINMENT, CULTURE AND CANINE CREATIONS.

AGENDA for 4/16-4/29

A Big Canvas

Curated art events stretch across Boston.

ASK OUT-OF-TOWNERS what comes to mind when they think of Boston, and you'll get one of a few inevitable answers, the most likely being "sports." And, yeah, we've definitely got that. (Refer to our last issue, dedicated to a certain baseball team of note.) However, this city is also home to a vibrant arts scene that rivals that of any cultural mecca on the map. (Ahem, we're looking at you, New York.) To recognize that, the Highland Street Foundation presents ArtWeek Boston, 10 days dedicated to celebrating our many artistic talents (like painter and children's book illustrator Ilene Richard, shown here in her studio). With more than 60 unique events—including a boxing demo that offers insight into a current theater production, a live fashion shoot where you can learn styling techniques and an installation of palm trees floating in Fort Point Channel—you'll be busy enough to forget it's Sox season...if only for a week or so. Alexandra Cavallo

ARTWEEK BOSTON runs April 25–May 4 at locations across the city. Event pricing ranges from free to $50. Visit artweekbostan.org for a full schedule. The Improper is a sponsor.

PERFORMING ARTS

FRIDAY NIGHT LIVE

For one night only, Barack Obama, Denzel Washington, Kanye West and Shaq will share a single stage. No, this isn't the most badass (and weirdest) supergroup since Crosby, Stills, Nash and Young started hanging out; Saturday Night Live cast member Jay Pharoah is stopping in town for a stand-up set, likely to include some of the talented impersonator's best characters. Pharoah first grabbed the world's attention via YouTube with his spot-on Obama impersonations, so when he joined the east, some fans worried that he might be a one-trick pony. Luckily, the funnyman has quieted any dissenters with recurring sketches like "Waking Up with Kimye," and he no doubt has more than a few tricks still hidden up his sleeve. Meet the many faces of Pharoah April 25 at the Wilbur Theatre. / Alexandra Cavallo

CHILD'S PLAY Maurice Sendak's beloved 10-sentence-long bedtime story begets a cinematic world of wonder in 2009's Where the Wild Things Are. Director Spike Jonze—who scored an Oscar for Best Original Screenplay for last year's Her—reimagines the classic tale of Max, a disobedient boy who appoints himself ruler of his own fantasy world. With help from Jim Henson's Creature Shop and some computer animation, this visually stunning children's film has plenty of grownup appeal, which makes it a perfect fit for the Brattle Theatre's six-day Kids' Movies Not Just For Kids series. Let the wild rumpus start April 22-23. / Abagail Sullivan

Reviews by Brett Michel

300: Rise of an Empire ★ 1/2 Did I ever expect the day would come when I'd miss Zack Snyder? Not to worry: We haven't reached that point yet, but this continuation of 300, his homoerotic frat-bait, is a film that does make me miss Gerard Butler, star of many terrible movies. Compared to Butler's digital-scenery-devouring King Leonidas in 2006's original, relative newcomer Sullivan Stapleton (Animal Kingdom) is actually understated, almost delivering a real performance as Greek general Themistokles, despite the broad speechifying that passes for his dialogue. Which is to say, he's overthought his role. The movie is based on Frank Miller's graphic novel Xerxes, so you'd expect that director Noam Murro would focus on Rodrigo Santoro's mortal-turned-god—but then you'd be doing the overthinking. Thankfully though, Santoro's golden-skinned giant shrinks before the might of Artemisia (Eva Green), commander of the Persian navy. Murro's bloody spectacle is a mess, part prequel, part sequel and mostly unnecessary—except for Green, whose 3-D nudity will have the college Greeks lining up in grateful servitude. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Bad Words ★★★ Not content playing the nice guy, Jason Bateman casts himself as a brilliant schmuck in this acidic comedy, his directorial debut. He plays Guy Trilby, a 40-year-old loner and merciless hijacker of children's spelling bees, at which every parent of the "pre-masturbators" wants him dead. He verbally and mentally abuses everyone on his path to the championship, even Jenny Widgeon (Kathryn Hahn), who nevertheless senses something inside Trilby. Sure, it might simply be bile, but he requires a media sponsor, and she's a reporter in need of a story. Bad Words is Andrew Dodge's first produced screenplay, and he isn't joking around with that title—or his commitment to debauched comedy. Take Trilby's unlikely bond with awkward 10-year-old finalist Chaitanya Chopra (Rohan Chand)—aka "Slumdog"—who remains unfazed even as Trilby introduces his competitor to smoking, shoplifting, drinking and streetwalkers. What's this all building to? I won't say, but I will direct you to the tagline on the film's poster: "The end justifies the mean." And how. (At Boston Common, Fenway, Kendall Square, Somerville and in the suburbs.)

Captain America: The Winter Soldier ★★★1/2 Literally defrosted after 70 years, Steve Rogers (Sudbury native Chris Evans), aka Captain America, is finding it difficult to reconcile his black-and-white worldviews with the shadowy grays of 2014. Having been given darker duds (and perhaps Batman's tailor) to suit the times, he reluctantly reports to Nick Fury (Samuel Jackson), his handler at S.H.I.E.L.D., the government spy agency that assembled superhero supergroup the Avengers. Thankfully, unlike recent Marvel Comics-derived movies headlined by teammates Iron Man and Thor, Cap's superb second solo outing is less an ad for next summer's Avengers: Age of Ultron than a throwback to the paranoid thrillers of the '70s. I'm looking at you, Three Days of the Condor. So, apparently, were directors Anthony and Joe Russo, who cast that film's hero, Robert Redford, in a pivotal role here. When an attempt is made on Fury's life, exposing a cancer that's destroying S.H.I.E.L.D. from within, Cap proudly dusts off his comfy old red, white and blue outfit; the overgrown boy scout turns fugitive, answering only to his sense of right and wrong as he sets things right. America, eff yeah. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Divergent ★1/2 If you're looking for a satisfying screen reunion of the talented leads of The Spectacular Now (Shailene Woodley and Miles Teller), move along. Here, Teller's a spectacular dick to Woodley, and he remains on the sidelines in the dystopian Chicago of director Neil Burger's boilerplate adaptation of Veronica Roth's young-adult novel. Society has been divided into easily digestible, post-apocalyptic factions: Erudite the intelligent, Abnegation the selfless, Amity the peaceful, Candor the honest and Dauntless the brave. Tris (Woodley) is Abnegation-born, but she's reached the age when an aptitude test will determine whether she's better suited to another faction. Turns out, she's secretly Divergent, a fit for multiple factions (or none), which makes her a threat to Jeanine (Kate Winslet), coup-crazy leader of the Erudite. Our heroine eventually falls for Four (Theo James), part of Radioactive the hot. OK, this last one isn't really a faction—although, absurdly, James' character really is named Four. Nevertheless, teens will find the Brit attractive, more so than Ansel Elgort, soon to be seen snogging Woodley in The Fault in Our Stars, who plays her brother here. Now that is divergent. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Finding Vivian Maier ★★★1/2 Vivian Maier loved collecting stories. The lifelong nanny hoarded newspapers, carting piles of them from home to home, family to family, with instructions that they never be touched. She was drawn to darker reporting, to tales of murder and secret lives. What her various employers and wards didn't know is that this eccentric woman had a secret life of her own. In death, she's attained a reputation as one of the most accomplished street photographers of the 20th century, having taken more than 100,000 photographs that went unseen—until amateur historian John Maloof purchased some contents of her storage locker by chance. Maloof and co-director Charlie Siskel's engrossing documentary chronicles his efforts to learn about the mysterious loner behind the photos. He follows a trail that leads him down a rabbit hole of conflicting accounts of the cagey recluse, as those who knew her realize on camera just how little they actually did know. It's a great story, one that Maier probably would have loved—if she weren't at the center of it. (At Kendall Square.)

The Grand Budapest Hotel ★★★½ Wes Anderson's latest confection is a sprawling valentine to a place that never was, an Eastern Europe nestled between the two world wars. Sixteen-year-old Zero Moustafa (newcomer Tony Revolori), the newly minted lobby boy at the titular mountainside retreat, becomes the most trusted friend and companion to M. Gustave (Ralph Fiennes in a gloriously profane performance). Fiennes plays the dandy, "liberally perfumed" concierge for the famed hotel, a physical creation that ranks with The Royal Tenenbaums' townhouse as a believably lived-in space of the imagination. The lightning-paced story encompasses the murder of a dowager (Tilda Swinton), the theft of a fictional Renaissance painting, more murders and the most impressive cast you're likely to encounter in cinemas all year. There are too many stars to list, but I must note that Anderson's priceless returning repertory players Bill Murray and Bob Balaban have even less to do here than they did in George Clooney's The Monuments Men, which seems downright criminal. But then, I'm greedy. When a film contains such ornate riches, you simply want more. (At Boston Common, Fenway, Kendall Square, Coolidge Corner, Somerville and in the suburbs.)

Jodorowsky's Dune ★★★½ In 1975, Chilean director Alejandro Jodorowsky announced his intention to adapt Frank Herbert's science fiction novel Dune—despite the small detail of his never having read it. Thus begins Frank Pavich's enthralling documentary, a chronicle of the (un-)making of one of the greatest movies never made. "Jodo" dreamed of giving audiences a "sacred experience"—mimicking the effects of LSD, without the actual intake—so just imagine the films we'd be watching today if Dune had become the influential blockbuster of our time, rather than Star Wars. Set to star Jodo's 12-year-old son, Brontis, alongside Orson Welles, Mick Jagger, David Carradine and Salvador Dali, with music by Pink Floyd and designs by H.R. Giger and Jean "Moebius" Giraud (who later funneled their talents into Ridley Scott's Alien), this Dune only exists as a massive volume of storyboards. They're glorious. An adaptation of Dune was eventually filmed; Jodo said it gave him "a pain in my heart, because if anyone can do it, it's David Lynch." Then, he saw Lynch's disastrous failure—with unexpected glee. Now, see what might have been, and still may be. (At Kendall Square.)

Mr. Peabody & Sherman ★★ Another cartoon you grew up with gets the overblown, 3-D, CGI treatment, as the "Peabody's Improbable History" segment from Rocky and His Friends and The Bullwinkle Show trips through time into 2014. Director Rob Minkoff (The Lion King) updates the cartoon classic that featured a Nobel-winning talking beagle and his "pet boy"—and it's for the dogs. As bad as that pun is, there are worse ones in this film, which I concede is appropriate, since the 5-minute-long TV adventures created by the late Ted Key dealt them like cards. Alas, little of the dry wit from Mr. Peabody and Sherman's original journeys into the past remains, replaced by a screenplay that makes the common franchise-building fumble of focusing on an origin story. Ty Burrell does a serviceable job voicing Peabody, but not casting, say, John Hodgman or David Hyde Pierce to recreate Bill Scott's vintage vocal performance seems like just one of many missed opportunities. If only there really were a WABAC machine, then maybe someone could go back and fix this mutt of a movie. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Muppets Most Wanted ★★★ "We're doing a sequel," sing the Muppets at the start of their new movie. James Bobin returns to direct Kermit, Miss Piggy, Gonzo and Fozzie for a second go-round, and he's canny enough about the self-deprecating charms of the childhood favorites to have the gang continue crooning about how sequels are "never as good." Maybe so, but this eighth film to headline Jim Henson's critters is still silly fun. Prodded by their new manager, Dominic Badguy (Ricky Gervais), they decide to tour Europe, boarding a train bound from L.A. to Berlin (just go with it). Once there, hecklers Statler and Waldorf read a poster announcing the performance. "Die Muppets? Looks like they've put up our reviews early!" Tina Fey and Ty Burrell co-star, as the Muppets unwittingly become entangled in an international crime caper spearheaded by Constantine, the "world's most dangerous frog"—and Kermit's doppelganger. As the song goes, this isn't quite as good as the last one, but that one didn't have Danny Trejo and Ray Liotta singing and dancing in a Boyz II Men prison number. (At Boston Common, Fenway, Somerville and in the suburbs.)

Need for Speed ★ Barely 10 minutes into this adaptation of the eponymous video game, director Scott Waugh posits his cast at a drive-in theater that's showing 1968's Bullitt. And not just any scene, but Steve McQueen's famed high-speed chase through the streets of San Francisco in a modified Ford Mustang. Way to set an impossibly high bar for yourself, Waugh. Breaking Bad's Aaron Paul plays Tobey Marshall, a mechanic/street racer tapped by Dino Brewster (Dominic Cooper)—a slimeball who's also sleeping with Tobey's ex—to rebuild a mythical Shelby Mustang, which promises to pay our grease monkey protagonist enough to save the family-run garage. Sounds good, until Marshall is framed for both vehicular manslaughter and the theft of two supercars. It's more Grand Theft Auto than Need for Speed, and Paul looks so constipated behind the wheel on his revenge-fueled race across the country that it's no wonder he can't supply the film with any real gas. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Noah ★★½ Darren Aronofsky's gonzo retelling of this Old Testament tale eschews things like rain lasting for 40 days and 40 nights in favor of creatively licensed additions like giant rock men who speak with the gravelly voice of Nick Nolte. God bless the crazy/brilliant Black Swan writer-director for giving us Russell Crowe's Noah, a clearly unhinged man suffering from psychotropic hallucinations that prompt him to build a massive ark

The IMPROPER BOSTONIAN SILO

(with the aid of those rock men, obviously) in preparation for a flood. Two animals from every species arrive, sauntering on board and promptly falling asleep. You won't suffer the same fate, wide-eyed as you witness cannibalistic men swarm the ark, only to be swatted away and/or stepped on by the rock people. Peter Jackson would approve—especially as Ray Winstone's Tubal-Cain stows away, surviving by eating some of the livestock (these poor creatures became extinct, I guess). When this barbarian tries to turn one of Noah's sons (Logan Lerman) against his dad, we're treated to a climactic fight scene, gladiator-style. Sacrilicious. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Non-Stop ★★½ "The TSA!" bellows the co-pilot of a transatlantic flight gone horribly wrong. "They gave a paranoid alcoholic a gun and a badge, and they put him on my plane! Jesus!" No, the son of God isn't on this jetliner; it's just Liam Neeson, reliably springing into action, yet again, in this latest thriller from Jaume Collet-Serra (director of Neeson's Unknown and the ridiculous adoption chiller Orphan). Certainly, air marshal Bill Marks is a drunk: The image of him swirling whiskey in a well-worn paper cup with a toothbrush, while seated behind the wheel of his car, before stumbling into LaGuardia says more about him than the quote above. But he still has every right to be paranoid, since someone begins sending him threatening text messages moments after lifting off from New York, bound for London. The mystery man or woman is demanding that our hungover hero transfer $150 million into an off-shore account, lest a passenger be executed every 20 minutes. It's like one of Agatha Christie's taut, locked-room mysteries, until 9/11 enters the plot. Too. Soon. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Under the Skin ★★★★ Director Jonathan Glazer (Sexy Beast, Birth) returns after a decade-long absence with a movie as strange and wonderful as anything Nicolas Roeg might have made in the '70s. There's more than a touch of The Man Who Fell to Earth, plus a lot of Performance, with Scarlett Johansson giving one of her most effective as a girl who fell to earth. Only her extraterrestrial's not a girl, exactly, even though a big selling point for this film is the promise of seeing Johansson fully nude. Despite this fact—and the four-star rating above—it must be stressed that this movie has as much mainstream appeal as Roeg's cited films. (And be honest: You've never heard of them, have you?) But for adventurous moviegoers, Glazer's freewheeling adaptation of Michael Faber's sci-fi novel, scored with otherworldly, buzzing strings by Mica Levi, offers the shock of discovery, and of the new. As Johansson's unnamed alien succubus drives the Scottish countryside in search of forsaken men, you may find yourself lured into this mysterious figure's van right alongside them. (At Kendall Square.)

MUSIC

Edited by Sarah Hagman

BAYOU BOYS Guitarist Zaek Feinberg's search for a band hit a high note when he overheard David Shaw singing on his front poreh. That ehance meeting led to the Revivalists, a New Orleans outfit that formed so fast they played their first gig in 2007 before settling on a name. The seven-man band has sinee performed their genre-defying jams—blending elassic N'awlins big brass sound with funk and old fashioned roek 'n' roll—everywhere from New York to Seattle, and they've had their musie featured in HBO's award-winning drama Treme. True to their name, the Revivalists reeently rereleased their 2012 album, City of Sound, with eight bonus traeks from their high-energy live performanees. Let the good times roll again on April 22 at the Sinelair. / Elissa Bernstein

SUIT YOURSELF

Garnished with ceramic flowers, sequins, fur and other found materials, Nick Cave's signature Soundsuits are vividly colorful, but they emerged from a dark period. Cave came up with the concept in the wake of the Rodney King beating in 1992, creating wearable works that act as a protective second skin. They also generate sound as they move—and Cave, a former Alvin Ailey dancer, puts them to use in live performances. But you can enjoy them as sculptural objects at the Institute of Contemporary Art, where a dozen recent Soundsuits are joined by some of Cave's new freestanding sculptures assembled from flea market finds. Walk among the colorful constructions through May 4. Frankie Barbato

Where did you take us? Send us a picture of you or a buddy or, better yet, someone famous reading THE IMPROPER BOSTONIAN and tell us where you went. The wilder your destination and the more creative your photo, the better your chances of making the cut in the esteemed IMPROPER Sightings.

In Anguilla, Marilyn and Jack Kiley mixed some ocean blue with Jeff Green.

In Saint Croix, Jon Fleurat, Laura Hagopian and Elizabeth Stemporzewski made a new friend who was a bit of a camera hog.

Janelle Chan, Helen Ho, Emily Yu and Karla Portocarrero were so excited about their trip to Sedona, Ariz., they could barely keep both feet on the ground.

Cranston Mayor Allan Fung knows style is a key to success, even in Rhode Island politics.

Restaurants

BACK DECK Professional Backyard Grilling [2 West Street (Corner of Washington), Boston, 617-670-0320, BackDeckBoston.com] Drawing inspiration from a New England back yard and featuring a menu of grill-focused favorites and patio sipping cocktails, Back Deck is an urban oasis in downtown Boston. With floor to ceiling windows and an open kitchen, Back Deck brings the outdoors inside and provides the perfect setting to enjoy the fun and flavor of hard-wood charcoal grilling year round.

THE BLACK ROSE [160 State Street, Boston, 617-742-2286, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Voted one of America's top ten Irish establishments, The Black Rose is Boston's premier Irish pub and restaurant. Established in 1976, the pub is located in the historic Faneuil Hall/Quincy Market area of Boston, and known far and wide for its convivial atmosphere, good food and live Irish entertainment. The menu features honest, made-from-scratch food including traditional Irish fare, award winning clam chowder, fish and chips, native lobster, aged Black Angus cuts of beef, and of course Mother Sweeney's corned beef – a recipe from Mother Sweeney herself! For thirty years The Black Rose has offered live Irish music seven nights a week. Memorable guests on stage have included members of the Chieftans, flutist James Galway, Tommy Makim, Liam Clancy, John Denver, and a once relatively unknown member of an Irish rock group called U2.

BROWNSTONE [11 Dartmouth Street, Boston, MA, 617-867-4142, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Situated on the border of Back Bay and the South End, Brownstone is named for the style and elegance reflective of the architecture of Boston's two neighborhoods. From the hardwood flooring to the Venetian plaster ceiling, the interior exudes classic warmth with a sleek and intimate bar made of mahogany and granite. Brownstone's menu features small plates with big flavors! It also has one of the best brunches in Back Bay and Monthly Beer and Wine Dinners.

CENTRAL WHARF CO. [160 Milk Street, Boston. 617-451-9460, centralwharf@irishconnection.com] The most recent addition to the Glynn Hospitality Group portfolio, Central Wharf Co. located on Milk Street is the newest hot spot in the financial district. Whether you are coming for dinner or meeting friends for some of our hand crafted cocktails, Central Wharf's welcoming atmosphere is reaffirmed by its gastronomic offerings. With a focus on healthy preparations and locally sourced ingredients, their simple comfort foods concepts are enhanced buy their contemporary accompaniment

COOGANS [171 Milk Street, Boston, 617-451-7415, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Located on the corner of laid back and good times, Coogan's is a business man's retreat by day and party people destination by night. Just on the edge of the Financial District, Coogan's is a cozy little neighborhood bar. Friendly Staff serves up fresh American style pub food and some of the best deals in Boston.

FORUM [755 Boylston St Boston MA 02116, 857-991-1831, forumboston.com] Gather, indulge, repeat! Two distinct floors, al fresco dining, two bars, and a modern function room for up to 60 guests. Indulge in New American cuisine such as Duck Confit, Halibut on Lobster Chorizo Risotto, Bone Marrow Encrusted Filet, or Wild Mushrooms Gnocchi. Open Daily.

HURRICANE O'REILLY'S [150 Canal Street, Boston, 617-722-0161, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] It's Hurricane season on Canal Street! The spirit of Mardi Gras and the French Quarter in the heart of the city. Serving Irish, American and Cajun specialties and conveniently located just steps away from the TD Garden. Voted best "Hockey Bar" in Boston by USA today, Hurricane's is the perfect place to gather pre- and post- game. After the sun sets on Canal Street, Hurricane's lights up into one of Boston's hottest nightclubs with a top 40 play list, illuminating disco lights and 6,800 square feet of Mardi Gras spirit.

MISTRAL [223 Columbus Ave, Boston, 617-867-9300, mistralbistro.com] Located in Boston's stylish South End, Mistral features the award winning French Mediterranean cuisine of Chef/Owner Jamie Mammano. The dining room's high ceilings and arched floor to ceiling windows encircle the candlelit room and evoke a warm feeling of casual sophistication. Le Salon du Mistral, Mistral's private dining room provides an intimate setting for gatherings of 60 seated for brunch, lunch and dinner and up to 80 for a cocktail reception. Sunday Brunch. Dinner Sunday-Saturday. Complimentary car service available in metro Boston.

NUBAR [16 Garden St., Cambridge MA, 02138, 617-234-1365, nubarcambridge.com] Nubar is an elegant, but comfortable neighborhood restaurant in the Harvard Square area. Chef Bill Flumerfelt's menu is creative American, with Mediterranean accents, sourcing locally whenever available. The wine list and our original cocktails will tickle your palette – great flavors for reasonable $.Whether you're in our fireside lounge, at our glowing honey onyx bar, or on our leather banquettes in the main dining room, you'll love our space.

OSTRA [1 Charles Street South, Boston, 617.421.1200, www.ostraboston.com] Ostra, located in Boston's Back Bay, is a contemporary Mediterranean seafood restaurant. Chef/Owner Jamie Mammano and Executive Chef Mitchell Randall focus on specialty seafood found throughout the Mediterranean and regions within the U.S. The dining room at Ostra evokes a sense of style and sophistication in a comfortable and inviting setting. Ostra also offers a fine bar and lounge area featuring live piano entertainment. Ostra's private dining room accommodates up to 42 for

YOU SHOULD'VE SEEN THE ABC AFTER-SCHOOL SPECIAL

I might have brought home better report cards if they'd served cocktails and canapés during homeroom, as they did when the Citi Performing Arts Center celebrated the Walter Suskind Memorial Fund's educational programs with a back-to-school-themed gala.

The Wang Theatre's decor incorporated rulers, apples, pencils, notebooks, crayons and other school paraphernalia. "Homeroom" was followed by "morning announcements," "student council" and a "pep rally," while the "cafeteria" served up such lip-smacking delicacies as lobster mac 'n' cheese and Black Angus sliders.

After taking attendance, "principal" Joe Spaulding rubbed elbows with the likes of actor/playwright and honoree Trieu Tran, uber-philanthropists Bob and Esta Epstein, veterinarian to the stars Dr. John de Jong and the lovely Carole Lee, the stunning Priscilla Douglas, sax legend Stan Strickland, hair care moguls Louise and Irvine Rusk, glam pixie Anne Lowe and the delightful Alicia Gordon, lovable shutterbug Roger Farrington and equally studious others, who sipped, supped and socialized enough to earn a lifetime of detention.

The award for Mean Girl remark goes to the woman who said, "I love your jacket; it's like attention deficit disorder plaid."

PHILISTINES AT THE GATES

After its flawless concert at Jordan Hall, the Discovery Ensemble hosted a reception at Lucca Back Bay to celebrate the chamber orchestra's success and toast maestro Courtney Lewis on being named an assistant conductor at the New York Philharmonic.

Present and accounted for were Polish stunner Anna Maria Anders, North Shore nabob John Rando, preppy hipster William Grote, preppy prepster Holt Massey, New England Conservatory rainmaker Janet "P.J." Goff, the soignee Chynna Pope, music patron Deb Hanley, Argentinean beauty Sibila Korb, statuesque redhead Kate Merritt, banking fashion plate Debbie Smith and cello soloist Nicolas Altstaedt, to name a few.

Overheard at the bar: "We had the ballet last night and this concert today. I need to go home and watch some bad TV."

YOU CAN PICK YOUR FRIENDS

The geniuses at MIT don't do anything by half measures, so when the Council for the Arts bestowed the prestigious Eugene McDermott Award upon Berlin-based artist Olafur Eliasson, it was an evening of unparalleled elegance.

Held at the Media Lab, the event attracted the likes of co-chairs Susan and Bill Poduska and Terry and Rick Stone, New York arts patron Agnes Gund, Texas roses Mary and Margaret McDermott, Gardner Museum head honcha Anne Hawley, composer/conductor Tod Machover, the dashing duo Peter Wender and Carl Karandjeff, architectural superstars Elizabeth Diller and Ricardo Scofidio, the naturally carbonated Betty Ann Blum and others of an equally elevated ilk.

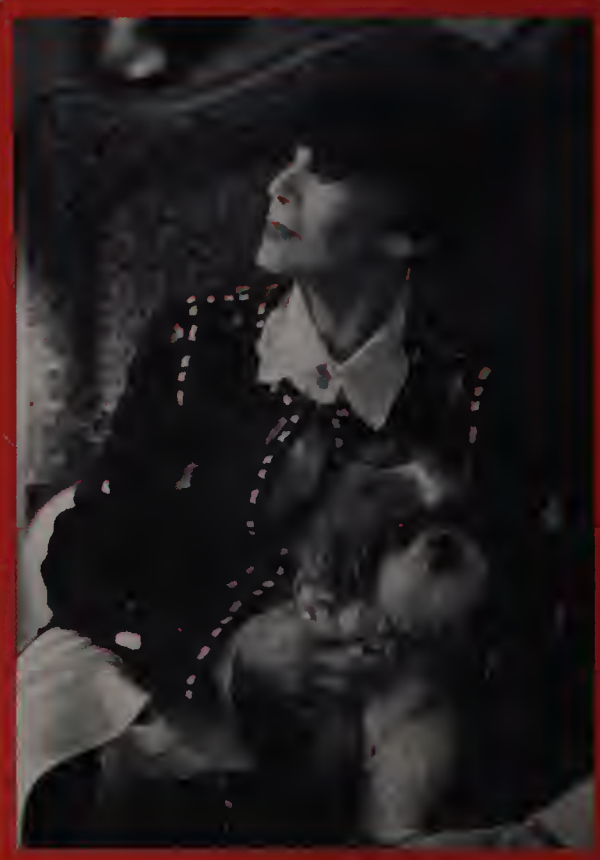
The food and wine were superb, and the speeches blessedly brief. And lest the evening sound too highbrow, know that the following observation was overheard: "There's an art to nose-picking in public." ◆



IN MEMORIAM

Boston lost a rare bird with the death of Marilyn Riseman, the kabuki socialite and fashion icon with a damn-the-torpedoes attitude and a signature look that, once glimpsed, you could never forget. Pint-sized and profane, she casually dropped the f-bomb in even the stuffiest of social settings and never begged anyone's pardon. The daughter of another great Boston character, the legendary "Doc" Sagansky, she tossed tradition out the window early on by going into the fashion business, and her boutiques reflected her unerring instinct for the chic and stylish. She settled on her own mien—black bobbed wig, Cleopatra-kohled eyes, ghostly white makeup and a slash of red across her pouty lips—and stuck with it, changing only the theatrical outfits she paired with it. It was a persona, of course, a mischievous middle finger to conformism, but there was nothing phony about Marilyn. She called 'em like she saw 'em and never pulled any punches. It will be strange not having her wave her cobra-topped cane in my face, then pull me down to whisper lovingly in my ear the many ways in which I was a "f---ing a--hole." Boston will miss you, Marilyn. It's as if somebody stole the Siberian tiger from the zoo.

Are You Among the 85 Percent?

Right now in the U.S., more than 85 percent of all women are wearing the wrong bra size and don't even realize it! Are you part of the 85 percent? I was and didn't even know it, but my time visiting a real "Bra Fit Stylist" made a world of difference and left me with a renewed sense of self-confidence! Here's my story:

The Introduction

My friend first introduced me to Intimacy, a bra retailer with over 15 stores in the U.S. when she asked me if I knew there was an 85 percent chance that I was wearing the wrong bra size. Curious to know if I was part of that statistic, I decided to schedule a Bra Fit Styling appointment online at MyIntimacy.com with their store in Copley Place.

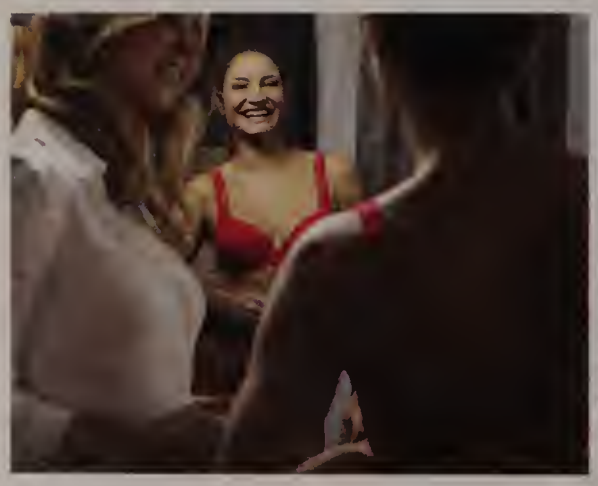
The Bra Fit Specialist

The day of my appointment, I was greeted by the stylists who were in the front of the store upon my arrival. They had me at hello! It's funny how a simple "Hi! Welcome to Intimacy, we will be right with you," was all that was needed to make me feel comfortable.

I was promptly met by Maria Stern, a Bra Fit Stylist that is knowledgeable about every brand and style in the store. Maria was eager to help me find the perfect bra. She lead me through the chic, well-lit and organized boutique to a spacious and comfortable dressing room where we could talk more freely.

We had a conversation regarding my needs and concerns about my current bra situation. The great thing about Intimacy is that their expertly trained Bra Fit Stylists have mastered the art of matching the ideal lingerie to your unique body and style.

Intimacy's renowned Bra Fit Styling service has been touted as "life changing," as many women leave the store feeling both comfortable and beautiful, something they never dreamed to be possible. This is no surprise, since the company's founder Susan Nethero, trained under the Queen of England's Royal Bra Fitter and Intimacy has professionally fit over one million women.



The Collection

After assessing my needs, Maria stepped out briefly and came back with three options for me. "May I?" she asked as she handed me a black, a blue and a red bra. The first bra I tried on fit perfectly; much better than the bra I wore that day and far better quality.

At Intimacy, they carry a unique collection of premium European brands, all of which are fashion-forward and of the highest quality available. Some of these brands include, Marie Jo, Prima Donna, and Andres Sarda to name a few. With 90 sizes to choose from in sizes A to K cup, and including sports bras, panties, shape wear, bathing suits and "bra-wear" items, such as strap extensions and delicate fabricate wash, Intimacy is at the top of its industry. Intimacy leads the intimates fashion business with proprietary research on style, fit and fashion and award-winning commitment to excellent customer service.

After a few test movements to ensure that the fit of the bra was perfect, I couldn't have been more happy. Maria explained to me that the secret to a perfect bra is not only a matter of size, but also style and selecting a color that works well with your skin tone.

I was only a few inches away from my true bra size, but for something that I use on a daily basis, a few inches made a world of difference. When I told her that, she nodded and agreed. "It's just like the perfect jeans or the right shoes," she says. "But many women don't take their bra, the garment that they wear daily and directly on their bodies, as seriously because it is not visible to the outside world." That's a little crazy when you think about it.

As Maria left me to dress, I was overcome by so much happiness. I never thought that bra shopping could be so much fun! I decided to buy three sets and met Maria at the register where she informed me that the average woman's breast shape and size changes a number of times in her life for a multitude of reasons, and recommended that I come back and get fitted in another six months. She also reminded me that Intimacy carries swimwear in cup sizes that I should try before my family vacation to the beach next month. Eager to see if Intimacy's line of swimwear would have the same cheerful effect on me, I made a follow-up appointment with Maria and left feeling like a million bucks. I'm so fortunate my friend told me about Intimacy. Never in a million years would I have thought I was among the 85 percent of women wearing the wrong bra size. I dare every woman to visit their local store to get fitted, check out their selection and find a renewed sense of self-confidence!

A MATTER OF TASTE

TODAY'S GLOSSY SHELTER MAGS, HOW-to blogs and decor-porn Pinterest boards owe a little something to an 1897 tome titled The Decoration of Houses, penned by Edith Wharton years before she won a Pulitzer for The Age of Innocence or bummed out generations of high school freshmen with Ethan Frome. One of the earliest guides to interior design, it condemned the overstuffed upholstery and eye-straining wallpaper of the Victorian era, arguing for simplicity and balance, principles still on display at the Mount, Wharton's estate in the Berkshires.

Of course, not all of her advice has stood the test of time: Ol' Edith frowned upon "dubious eclecticism" and cautioned against mixing different styles of furnishings. But you'll find inspiration for doing just that in this issue. Nicole Popma tapped three top local interior designers, who gave very different makeovers to the same room, creating design schemes that draw from a range of eras, materials, price points and technologies. (I'm still coveting that nightclub-worthy light-up coffee table.)

Elsewhere, Lindsay Tucker looks at an eco-renovation from a local firm at the forefront of green design. Alix Childs offers ways to pimp out your powder room. I check out an exhibit's midcentury modern furnishings, while Ezra Dyer offers some offbeat home decorating tips. (Barnacles are the Next Big Thing!) And Jonathan Soroff interviews Tufts alum and fashion house founder Reed Krakoff, who dishes on some of his own favorite interior designers—his wife included—and reminds us, "There's no good taste or bad taste. There's taste that's developed, or not." Edith might disagree, but it makes a lot of sense to me.

FLOWER POWER

Natural Beauty

Farm-to-table we know, but farm-to-bathroom cabinet? That's less familiar territory for us, but home turf for one local herbalist and aromatherapist. Jen Burney harnesses the powers of plants with Amber Blue, a skin care company she co-founded with her daughter. Using ingredients grown in her own Hudson-based family garden, which is currently expanding to a larger property, she creates chemical-free, plant-based products like a serum with lavender, primrose and chamomile oils, and a comfrey and fennel steam facial. "We don't want to use anything that's gimmicky," Burney says. "What's been used for hundreds or thousands of years works." Below, Burney explains the effects of some of the flowers and herbs in her arsenal. / Hannah Sheinberg

(From top to bottom)

NETTLE
Though this plant is known for the stinging hairs on its leaves, the dried version works as a mineral-packed astringent. Burney, who brought the seeds over from Ireland, mixes the nettles with French green clay, peppermint and almonds to create the pistachio-hued Green Goddess mask.

CALENDULA
Also known as a pot marigold, these orange flowers act as an anti-inflammatory treatment for sensitive skin, and can also jump-start tissue growth around wounds.

LEMON BALM
A member of the mint family, this herb is known to reduce anxiety and can be sipped as a relaxing tea. But it also soothes the skin, and Burney uses it in Amber Blue's steam facial.

LAVENDER
While this prize of Provence is known for its calming effect on the skin and the nervous system, lavender can also treat sunburns, insect bites, cuts, headaches, colds, flu and insomnia. "Lavender is my go-to," Burney says.

CHAMOMILE
"Chamomile is known for its calming and healing effect," Burney says. "Peter Rabbit's mother made chamomile tea to relax her baby rabbits." Known for their prominence in nighttime tea, these yellow, daisy-like buds can also help heal eczema, psoriasis and dry skin.

THE END OF RENDEZVOUS

A CAMBRIDGE MEETING SPOT SAYS ADIEU.

Until chef/owner Steve Johnson shutters Rendezvous in July for "lease-driven" reasons, expect things to continue as usual at the Central Square restaurant. That's because the decision to close was not about the level of business, according to the former James Beard Award nominee.

"I'm in year nine of a 10-year lease, and negotiations didn't go in the direction I was hoping for," Johnson says. With a new restaurant for Johnson on the horizon in Rhode Island, Rendezvous will close without any pageantry. There will be "no theme dinners, no big bashes," although Johnson might occasionally feature some of the nine-year-old eatery's "greatest hits" on the Mediterranean-influenced menu.

Johnson, who has a home in Westport, will try to replicate that experience in Tiverton, Rhode Island, at a spot he's coveted for a long time. If all goes according to plan, the Red Dory—which Johnson notes is "the same size and shape as Rendezvous, but with a deck, an herb garden and views of the Sakonnet River"—will open later this year.

CREAM OF THE CROP

We Bostonians love our ice cream but, given the plethora of shops in town, do we feel the need to make our own? Well, there are some nifty-sounding recipes in Scoop Adventures: The Best Ice Cream of the 50 States by Lindsay Clendaniel. If you churn through the recipes, you'll find Toscanini's Coffee Ice Cream Sandwich Ice Cream as well as ice creams flavored with plum and lemon verbena, Thai peanut curry, and chocolate sesame brittle.

GET IT POPPING: Fun options like curry caramel popcorn will have a home on Lulu's menu.

Lulu's Allston

First Taste / Matt Martinelli

BRING THE FUNK

LULU'S ALLSTON IS SET TO MIX IT UP.

SARAH WADE HAS ONLY BEEN WORKING IN Boston for six months, but it's been plenty of time for the chef of the forthcoming Lulu's Allston to discover that the city has broken free of its baked beans and chowder stereotypes.

"The creativity that Boston residents accept from chefs is really cool. It's exciting to see what chefs can do and people will pay money for," says Wade, who has cooked all across the country and spent the past six months working at the Hill Tavern and Woody's Grill and Tap. "I've been places where you say, 'Let's try this,' but nobody else wants it."

The mantra for Lulu's, slated to open by mid-May at the former Cafe Brazil, is funky and food-focused—hence a menu of options such as wild-game Frito chili pie and curry caramel popcorn. Vegetarians can gravitate toward the Thai-quinoa black-bean burger, while vegans can try the ramen with roasted mushrooms, spinach and rice noodles. Wade also plans a few beer-influenced dishes, and with Lulu's offering 50 drafts and 50 bottles, she'll have a prime selection of suds. Brew-boosted dishes will include saison-steamed mussels, porter-braised pork shank and a Harpoon Stout milkshake.

"This may sound silly, but I like Diners, Drive-Ins and Dives," Wade says. "I think it's cool that there's always something on the menu that the neighbors like enough to suggest it to the show. That's kind of how I think about it when we put together the menu."

Neighborhood appeal was front and center for Lulu's co-owners Josh Culpo and Justin Dalton-Ameen as well as majority partners Mark Murphy and Peter Culpo (Josh's uncle and owner of the Parish Cafes, among other restaurants). Affordability was key: Appetizers will range from $7 to $10, while entrees will be mostly $10-$16. And as Harvard and New Balance embark on new construction in the Allston area, the folks behind Lulu's Allston hope to stand out amid a sea of college dives, sports bars and restaurants focusing on ethnic cuisine.

"There's not a ton of comfortable places you can go, get a really good meal at an easy, fair price, and not feel like you're at a sports bar or some place you have to go crazy to have a good time," Dalton-Ameen says. Lulu's space seats just more than 100 and has eclectic decor, with a wall of reclaimed shutters from a New Bedford salvage yard and another wall of Lulu's logos painted with Warhol-esque colors.

"What you see now was four different rooms. It's a semi-open kitchen, with a free, easygoing vibe," he says. "We're just trying to make a really great experience that won't kill you in the wallet."

Q&A

EMBRACING ME!

You don't have to be a punk fan to have recently taken notice of Against Me! In 2012, singer Tom Gabel came out as transgender, adopting the name Laura Jane Grace. What hasn't changed is the gritty, galvanizing spirit of their music. We hit up new drummer Atom Willard, who joined the band for their latest album, in preview of their show at Royale on May 5.

AGAINST ME! HAS TAKEN FLACK FROM FANS FOR "SELLING OUT." THE NEW ALBUM, TRANSGENDER DYSPHORIA BLUES, FEELS LIKE A RETURN TO THE BAND'S PUNK ROOTS. AGREE? There's an overwhelming theme of complete discontent that was maybe lacking in some White Crosses songs. New Wave is my favorite record, still, so I really didn't have any of those major-label-stigma feelings. When I was 19, I signed to a major label, and it was like the end was coming for my band. And I was like, "It's not going to change who we are. We're just trying to be able to do this and not live in a f---ing tent on the side of the road." I think the new record has such a genuine mission statement. Not only for what Laura's doing, but the way it was recorded and the production values.

THERE'S A 'F--- YOU' SPIRIT THAT MUST HAVE A LOT TO DO WITH WHAT LAURA WAS GOING THROUGH WHILE WRITING IT... I don't think that she ever denies who she was, and she's very accepting of who she is. [But] I think that there is this level of uncertainty and realization. It's also like...f--- off for trying to keep me from doing what I want to do.

HANGING OUT WITH LAURA AS TOM, AND NOW AS LAURA—HOW WAS THAT TRANSITION? I'll say this: Me talking and hanging out with Laura is much easier and more natural than conversations I ever had with Tom. She's just a happier person. That extends and transfers to all different aspects of her daily life. It all happened very easily and naturally, and we don't even think about it.

HOW HAS FAN RESPONSE BEEN? It's been overwhelmingly positive. And the shows are just incredible. There's this element of uncertainty and unhinged chaos. Everything's a powder keg that's just about to go. / Alexandra Cavallo

BORSAO TRES PICOS, CAMPO DE BORJA, 2012
From Aragon in northern Spain, this silky, old-vine garnacha is produced in the shadows of Moncayo mountain. Its coffee-like aromas and soft, mellow texture are garnacha signatures. Delicate and round, with red cherry fruit and a peppery hint in the finish, this is a red you can serve slightly cooler to complement light spring dishes.

TARIMA HILL "OLD VINES" MONASTRELL, ALICANTE, 2011
Aged for 20 months in French oak barrels, this is a big-boy wine: full and rich on the palate, with intense smoky, roasted blackberry flavors, and a touch of licorice in the finish. The monastrell grape, known as mourvedre in France, features a savory edge that is a delicious counterpoint to barbecued meat.

BODEGAS ZERRAN, MONTSANT, 2011
This ripe, spicy melange of garnacha, mazuelo and syrah tastes ultra-juicy and balanced with vibrant acids and black raspberry fruit. Floral, slightly gamey and tobacco-like in scent, its ripe, plum flavor is offset by a touch of dark chocolate and subtle minerality. Try this with a succulent grilled tuna steak.

Cali Comforts

Mad Men's California sojourns have been a bit of a downer. A sunnier take on the state at midcentury waits at the Peabody Essex Museum in California Design, 1930–1965: Living in a Modern Way. On view through July 6, the exhibit features 250-plus objects—a sleek 1964 Studebaker Avanti, bathing suits made from parachute silk, an ice crusher that looks like a weapon wielded by a comic book hero, early Barbie dolls, cheery ceramics, clean-lined furniture and other mementos of movements that aimed to democratize design, uniting craft and mass production. We tapped curator Austen Barron Bailly for insight into a few of the exhibit's furnishings—and an ideal of beautiful, comfortable living that resonated far beyond the Golden State. / Jacqueline Houton

This plywood pachyderm designed by Charles and Ray Eames may be a charming toy, but it owes its existence to war. California was at the forefront of defense manufacturing, and the molded plywood techniques the Eames developed while designing lightweight leg splints for the Navy during WWII later featured in their famed chairs and this 1945 piece. "To appropriate what had been war materials to the home and ordinary life was a huge goal," Bailly says.

"There was this popular syndicated columnist, Eugenia Sheppard," Bailly says, "and she wrote that the cocktail table was the heart, soul and center of the home, the one piece of furniture that a housewife might splurge on." This multifunctional specimen circa 1950 certainly seems worth a splurge. Designed by Milo Baughman, it's equipped with compartments for cigarettes, magazines and even a planter.

"One of the things about the mindset of Californians," Bailly says, "was the freedom to experiment and embrace different influences," notably from Latin America and Asia. Consider this 1968 Lotus Chair designed by Miller Yee Fong for Tropi-Cal, known for sculptural, pool-deck-ready rattan furniture. As Bailly puts it, "The indoor/outdoor living, the color, the texture, the kind of informality and casual glamour really is what distinguishes the notion of California modern."

PAYING IT FORWARD

DUDE AT TEA STATION: I was biking past Prudential when I saw your beautiful food truck. Boston needs bubble tea places, and a vehicle is even better! I eagerly perused the varied menu. But alas, you only took cash. God then told me he cared for me, as you actually gave me a free beverage despite my debit card-only wallet, and I proceeded to bike one-handed home. It tasted of fruit and gummy bears and elegance. I want everyone to order drinks from the Tea Station food truck all summer now. I know I will!

Bubble tea biker

TO THE PERSON IN CHARLESTOWN WHO WROTE DOWN THE PLATE NUMBER AND LEFT A NOTE ON MY WINDSHIELD AFTER YOU SAW A LANDSCAPING TRUCK SIDESWIPE MY CAR AND TAKE OFF: I was able to track down the owner, have them admit to the hit-and-run and pay for it through their insurance. Thanks for being a great neighbor. And I hope you saw the note I left on my windshield after I got yours that said: THANK YOU!

Feeling neighborly

TO THE PAPARAZZI MANAGER WHO GAVE ME MY TAKE-OUT ORDER FOR FREE WHEN I LEFT MY WALLET AT HOME: That was the kindest, most generous thing anyone has ever done for me, and it was done with such a beautiful spirit. What you didn't know was that my wife, who has ALS, was at home waiting for me to bring back her favorite meal. Thank you.

Full of thanks

TO THE THREE MEN SITTING DOWN ON THE B LINE ON MONDAY MORNING: I can only imagine how hardworking you must be every day, particularly Monday morning, when none of you could offer a seat to the pregnant lady who got on at the Warren Street station and remained standing until Park Street. I know chivalry is dead, but I was hoping that your brains weren't. Offering a seat to a person who needs it more than you is not chivalry; it's common sense. The fact that you ignored my hint when I mentioned an empty seat in the back shows me that you are all just jerks.

Taking a stand

TO FELLOW COMMUTERS: Wait until you get to work before bathing yourselves in your cologne, perfume and body spray! This morning I had to give up my most coveted seat on the Orange Line to avoid the strong scent of the woman sitting next to me. If you insist on using perfume in the morning, do it sparingly, remember less is more and don't use the cheap stuff.

HOME COOKING: Locke Ober's private dining rooms have found a second life.

NEW HOMES WITH AN OLD SOUL

The recent boom in luxury residential developments has hit some historic addresses, from the Arlington, opened in the art deco building that housed the Boston Renaissance Charter Public School, to the forthcoming Ink Block, occupying the block that served as Boston Herald headquarters for 54 years. But the title for most storied space goes to the Winter Place Residences, slated to be completed by May's end in the former home of Locke-Ober—the city's third-oldest restaurant until its 2012 closure, a local institution that had served vichyssoise and sweetbreads Eugenie to generations of Boston Brahmins and boldfaced names, from JFK and Ted Williams to Norman Mailer and Princess Grace.

Redeveloped by Origen Properties, the 1832 Greek Revival building's six residences boast lots of modern luxuries—steam showers and soaking tubs, heated bathroom floors, sprawling chef's kitchens and a garden roof deck with a party-ready caterer's kitchen. But the most unique features are the carefully restored period details found in some units. In one, as soon as you exit the elevator, you're in a foyer with original paneling from Locke-Ober's private dining rooms. Elsewhere are handcrafted moldings, ornate door casings, brass sconces, fluted columns, gold-trimmed mirrors and intact "Ring for Service" bells. Several original elements come together in a living/dining area known as the Camus Room, named for the manager extraordinaire who steered Locke-Ober from 1894 to 1896 and 1901 to 1939. "It's much easier for them to say, 'Let's knock it down and start over,' " says Valerie Post of Meridian Realty Group, the firm representing the property, noting that gut renos are the norm, even in history-laden Boston. "[Here] nothing was thrown away."

In the 1880s, Bacon's Dictionary of Boston observed that Ober's was "patronized by the possessors of long purses." That'll definitely be true of the new residences (the one home to the Camus Room is priced at $1.75 million). But Origen is talking to potential operators for a first-floor restaurant—so those of us with shorter purses may soon be able to belly back up to Locke-Ober's carved mahogany bar. / Jacqueline Houton

Purveyors: Oliver's Twist

Launched last year, Oliver Blumgart Designs turns out cheery textiles with patterns so precise, it's easy to forget they're largely created by hand. The Beverly-based designer starts by sketching fine geometric shapes, like the celestial icon that features in his signature North Star pattern. From there, he meticulously paints the design using a wide palette of watercolors. Then the designs are digitized and used on tightly woven fabrics, thick sheets of wallpaper and personal accessories such as tote bags and decorative pillows that make a great pick-me-up for any room. / Elizabeth Bomze

LOCAL COLOR: The new company has its textiles screen-printed at a Rhode Island mill.

MAKING CHANGE

A COLLECTION OF STORIES COVERS ANGER AND HOPE IN SHORT ORDER.

The Cost of Lunch, Etc.* by Marge Piercy
Published by PM Press, 176 pages, $22
The author lives on Cape Cod.

AT AGE 78, PROLIFIC NOVELIST AND POET Marge Piercy has released her first collection of short stories, 20 tales bristling with feminism and idealism. A longtime activist herself, Piercy centers "The Border" on a woman committed to anti-war activities who drives draft dodgers to Canada by night, briefly sharing their bravery and fear. At times Piercy's fictions have an ideological spin, feeling like essays presented as stories. Take "How to Seduce a Feminist (or Not)," in which Piercy traces five dating vignettes from the mid-'70s to the present. Romantic? Hardly. With a satirical bitterness, she portrays the men as lunkheads, self-righteous ideologues, money hungry and selfish. Only in the final paragraphs do we encounter Seth, who washed the dishes, "was considerate and knowledgeable in bed" and "listens when she speaks."

Other stories shine with subtle insights. In "Somebody Who Understands You," a popular English teacher identifies with his students' teen spirits, seeing the world their way, encouraging them to "break the rules he can't." But their positions change, and as they grow up, he keeps one wistful foot in adolescence. And both scary and touching is "Saving Mother from Herself," narrated by a widowed hoarder who is forced to clean up on a reality show, only to reclaim her crazy darlings from the resale shop afterward.

FROM PAGE 81: He started to say his real name and she interrupted, "Your traveling name."

"James Royce...Makes me feel like I'm in a spy movie.... I'm going to Manitoba to see my aunt who married a Canadian."

"Where in Manitoba?"

"Winna something or other."

"Winnipeg."

"Are you a teacher or something?"

She grimaced. "I'm the person who's trying to get you into safety." ◆

BIG IMPRESSIONS: The highest point of Dubai's dazzling skyline is the Burj Khalifa, the world's tallest building.

Traveler's Checks

Expats compose a majority of Dubai's population, and non-Muslim customs are accepted—so ladies can feel free to wear bikinis on the beach (although you may be swimming alongside a woman in a burqa). However, public displays of affection, whether by heterosexual or same-sex couples, are deeply frowned upon, and respectful dress and conduct are expected in public places.

Many things in Dubai are expensive, especially alcohol, which is heavily taxed. If you plan on drinking, buy a bottle for your hotel room at the duty-free shop. (Note that although imbibing is tolerated, public drunkenness is definitely not.) Taxis, on the other hand, are relatively inexpensive because of the low price of gas.

ARABIAN HEIGHTS

THE ANCIENT AND THE MODERN MEET IN DUBAI'S OVER-THE-TOP GRANDEUR.

In March, Emirates Air inaugurated nonstop service between Boston and the United Arab Emirates, making Dubai a 13-hour direct flight away—although given the level of service on Emirates, it's more like a magic carpet ride. If you can spring for first class (roughly $16,000), you'll be pampered by flight attendants who can pour Dom Pérignon during the worst turbulence, but even economy class outstrips first class on most U.S. carriers. And before you know it, you're landing in a city that many people mistakenly think of as the Miami or Las Vegas of the Middle East.

Unlike Vegas, Dubai forbids gambling, and its jaw-dropping displays of wealth make Miami look understated. A more accurate comparison might be to Chicago in the late 19th century, when the term "skyscraper" was invented and the World's Columbian Exposition gave Paris' 1889 World's Fair—where the Eiffel Tower was introduced—a run for its money. It's a city that relentlessly pushes the boundaries of engineering and ingenuity. As our guide, Alex, put it, "Dubai is all about BLT—the biggest, the longest, the tallest. Everything here is a superlative."

And so it is. The Burj Khalifa—at 2,716.5 feet—is the world's tallest building, and the Dubai Mall is the world's largest shopping mall. The sail-shaped Burj Al Arab is widely considered the world's most luxurious hotel, and in the Gold Souk, you can see jewelry so big it can't possibly be worn, like the ring displayed in a window alongside a certificate from the Guinness Book of World Records.

The newness of nearly everything is obvious at the opulent Waldorf Astoria on Palm Jumeirah, a man-made archipelago shaped like a palm tree. The hotel opened at the beginning of the year, and in March, the contractor's pencil marks were still visible on the marble stairs leading from the lobby to the beach.

Yet, amid the modernity, it's still possible to find traces of the old Arab way of life. Dubai, "The City of Merchants," originally grew up around the mouth of a saltwater "creek" that attracted settlers and traders. Clustered in this area are the majestic Grand Mosque, the spice, textile and gold souks, and the Shindagha historical district (where you can see the ancestral seat of the ruling Al Maktoum family as well as the Diving Village, which offers a glimpse of the pearl-diving trade that enriched the city for centuries). The Dubai Museum is housed in the Al Fahidi Fort, the city's oldest existing building (circa 1787), and the narrow alleys of the Bastakiya, a residential area settled in the 1690s, features traditional architecture that now houses art galleries and cafes. Meanwhile, water taxis—or abras—will shuttle you across the creek, where the trading vessels known as dhows that still sail the Persian Gulf are tied up three deep.

For a taste (however Disneyfied) of the ancient way of life, you can also venture out into the desert. Emirates' parent company operates one of the top outfitters, Arabian Adventures, which maintains a nature preserve where you can go sand-boarding and four-wheeling in the dunes, learn the history of falconry, take an obligatory camel ride and have dinner in a Bedouin-style camp that would serve as a nice setting for the season finale of The Bachelor. That same evening, you can be back in the city in time to go snow-skiing inside the Dubai Mall.

It's this mixture of the ancient and the high-tech that makes Dubai so surreal. Like Venice, it's a completely improbable place—one that has no real business being there. When you venture to the top of the Burj Khalifa, for instance, there isn't that much to look at: Beyond the city, it's pretty much desert on one side and water on the other. But the real point is printed on the admission ticket: "Get Ready to Enter the Record Books."

This exuberance gives Dubai a seductive charm; it's so over-the-top that anyone with a scintilla of imagination can't help but be gobsmacked. The heady blend of Arabian romance and the latest innovations can feel like a 21st-century fairy tale (even if the darker aspects remain hidden from outsiders). And, like any good fairy tale, Dubai has its Prince Charming, in the person of Hamdan bin Mohammed bin Rashid Al Maktoum, the son of the current ruler. As with everything else in Dubai, the 31-year-old "Prince Cutie-pie" (a rough translation of his nickname in Arabic) outdoes his Western counterparts: Not only is he a sky-diving, race car-loving, equestrian poet, but he makes Prince William at his dreamiest look like chopped liver. ◆

HIGH BAR

THE SOUTH END GETS A KNOCKOUT BAR WITH CASUAL SEAFOOD.

MERRILL & CO.
1 Appleton St., Boston
(617-728-0728)
merrillandcoboston.com

The South End has long been one of Boston's top dining destinations and, after a few slow years, appears to be roaring back. Wink & Nod, Five Horses Tavern and Boston Chops are examples of newcomers breathing life into old spaces, and more are on the way. Further, the neighborhood is embracing a critical recent trend on the larger scene: leading with a strong beverage program. While not everyone can execute craft cocktails at the level of a Drink or Hawthorne, many new restaurants now offer beautifully constructed cocktails, interesting wines and geek-worthy beer lists. Merrill & Co., the brand-new South End spot from the folks behind Downtown Crossing's smash hipster-bar-with-food jm Curley, is the latest example of this laudable development.

Both restaurants share talented beverage director Kevin Mabry, and Merrill features a specialty cocktail list full of inventive, delicious originals like the St. Charles Punch ($10), in which late-bottled vintage port adds fruitiness and a beautiful magenta hue to cognac and lemon, with Tiki-like garnishes of nutmeg and mint. A Pimm's Cup Slushie ($9) out of the frozen-drink machine puts a fun, fresh-ginger-spiked spin on the stuffy British summer cooler. The Chipiona ($11) combines the slightly floral Ford's gin with fino sherry, blanc vermouth and celery bitters, like a bone-dry martini by way of Dr. Brown's. Mabry's interest in fortified wines is further reflected by a 17-strong by-the-glass list of sherries ($8-$11). Twenty-six beers in cans and bottles ($4.50-$12, large formats $15-$38) and 10 on tap ($5-$8) emphasize small American producers but include some Belgian and Germans, plus a few craft hard ciders. Wines are unusual and affordable, with nine by the glass ($8-$12) and 26 bottles ($28-$150, most under $50). Combine the bar staff's warm hospitality and precise technical chops with well-curated spirits, wines and beers, plus top-quality fresh juices, bitters and garnishes behind them, and you immediately have one of the South End's best bars.

Meanwhile, executive chef Jason Cheek puts out a similarly useful and of-the-moment menu, spurning the so-last-century app/entree/dessert progression in favor of a share-everything approach based on snacks, small plates and big platters. Raw bar offerings include a daily selection of local oysters—not cheap at $3 a throw, but fresh and pristine. Snacks are at once familiar and nicely executed, like deviled eggs ($6) accompanied by good house-made pickles, and a heaping bowl of fried pork rinds ($5) with a first-rate vinegar/espelette pcppcr sauce: excellent drinking food. Generously sized small plates include vegetable dishes that tend toward the non-vegetarian, complicated and umami-rich, like sugar snap peas ($8) with bacon, sweet soy and Meyer lemon; cauliflower ($8) in a terrific onion jam with almonds; and a superb plate of asparagus ($12) with slices of crisp sunchoke and the lovely creaminess of cured egg.

Cheek shows a particularly deft hand with seafood, keeping it nicely simple with hamachi crudo ($13) barely touched with beet miso and ponzu. The wonderful tiger shrimp ($18) is sauteed and given a bit of intense, fermented funkiness with XO sauce and black beans. Octopus ($18) is long braised to great tenderizing effect and afforded fine contrast with kimchee and charred onion. Fried catfish ($12) with a bland kohlrabi slaw and tartar sauce shows a hint of a Southern accent. Similarly skillfully fried oysters ($14) benefit mightily from the strangely marcasite-toned but delicious squid-ink aioli; with luck, the superior original version of this dish with fried smelts ($14) will return. For your friends who have resisted sea urchin, Merrill has a beginner's version in uni French bread ($16), as unthreatening-looking as dorm-room toaster-oven pizza, but a lot tastier.

Larger plates include a perfectly done and deftly tableside-filleted whole fish (black bass one night, $37) with a spicy, terrific cucumber-based sambal plus two sides. The impressive 32-ounce bone-in ribeye ($54) is given a boost of fattiness with lardo and beef butter. The short list of desserts includes a light, simple version of blackberry panna cotta ($7), though you could opt instead for a classic Brooklyn egg cream ($5) of milk, seltzer and Fox's U-bet chocolate syrup topped with the proper old-timey paper straw.

Fans of jm Curley will recognize the style of service here, signified by raglan baseball tees and snapback trucker hats: sassy, friendly and informal, as befits a place that seems as much raucous neighborhood tavern as restaurant. Utterly exorcising the slick modern gorgeousness of its predecessor, Merrill's interior has gone mid-century retro with chrome and black Naugahyde barstools and chairs, pressed-tin ceilings and vintage advertising and neon signs, though modern charcoal tones and polished concrete floors save it from veering too far into malt-shop pastiche. Two additional bars overlook the open kitchen and raw bar, while the large, comfy patio survives as a major asset. You might think of Merrill & Co. as jm Curley with the rough edgcs burnished off for an older, sedater South End crowd. With its grazing and sharing, love of local seafood, copious bar and communal seating, high-quality drinks and studied informality, it also servcs as an attractive compendium on The Way We Eat Now. ◆

Q: I HAVE BEEN READING ABOUT COOLSCULPTING, IS IT A GOOD ALTERNATIVE TO LIPOSUCTION?

A: CoolSculpting is a revolutionary non-surgical body contouring treatment that freezes fat, which is then naturally eliminated from your body. That fat is permanently gone. No needles, no surgery, and no downtime. It is safe and effective.

Many of us have fatty areas, such as our stomach or love handles, that resist diet and exercise. CoolSculpting uses controlled cooling to target and crystallize fat cells; only fat cells are affected. After treatment, the crystallized cells are gradually removed by the immune system, resulting in a permanent reduction in the amount of fat in that area.

Results are visible within 3 weeks of treatment and the final results are seen after two months. This is the perfect time of year to freeze away bulges that bother you!

ENDLESS LOVE

IT'S HIP TO BE DEAD AS JIM JARMUSCH BITES INTO THE VAMPIRE GENRE.

WITH ALL OF THE RELIGIOUS-THEMED movies that have been making the rounds in cinemas recently, you'll be forgiven if you think you're in for more of the same from a film featuring lovers named Adam and Eve. You'll realize soon enough that these two lovers—Eve with her long white locks, clumped and stringy as though the strands have remained unwashed for centuries, and Adam with his jet-black hair, not quite as long, but a bit out of place for a Biblical tale—only spring to life under the glare of the moon.

That's right: We're in for a vampire movie. But Only Lovers Left Alive is no Twilight. This is a Portrait of the Artists as the Undead, imagined by writer/director Jim Jarmusch (Mystery Train, Down by Law) in his first picture in five years.

As played by Tom Hiddleston and Tilda Swinton, these two are a different breed of bloodsucker than the tweens are used to. Like their director, Adam and Eve are creators, repudiating fame, preferring to disseminate their works quietly. They derisively refer to the humans who consume their art as "zombies." That is to say, us—the drones who pay 12 bucks to get our Friday night cinematic fix.

While Eve hangs out in Tangier cafes with her great friend and supplier of the "good stuff" (vials of O-positive blood), Christopher Marlowe—yes, that Christopher Marlowe, yon scholars of Shakespeare and his ghostwriters—she senses that something is amiss with Adam, who's holed up in a sprawling manse in that dilapidated city of the dead, Detroit.

When we first see Adam, the incredibly talented musician/recluse is being visited by Ian (Star Trek's Chekov redux, Anton Yelchin), a sycophantic rock promoter who's delivering a priceless collection of guitars, from a 1905 Gibson to a 1966 Hagstrom—and Adam's willing to pay cash for them. A lot of cash. Caressing the Gibson, Adam wistfully recalls, "I once saw Eddie Cochran play one of these..."

"Wait," says an incredulous Ian, "you actually saw Eddie Cochran play?" Adam's eyes shift, then regain focus, as he continues: "Yeah, on YouTube." How else could this pale, seemingly 30-something man have seen the rockabilly pioneer, who died in 1960?

On his way out, Ian asks if there's anything else "weird/interesting" that Adam might need. There is: a .38-caliber bullet, "made from the hardest wood you can find."

This isn't so much a movie about plot; rather, it's another exercise in mood and style.

Adam and Eve may be old-fashioned (centuries-long romances can leave couples set in their ways), but they communicate just like a pair of crazy kids—via Facetime. Separated by an ocean, but sensing Adam's malaise, Eve decides to pay him an unexpected visit in Detroit.

"Give my regards to that suicidally romantic scoundrel," says the grizzled Marlowe (played with exceptional world-weariness by a tousled John Hurt), as Eve replies, "Well, hopefully, he's just romantic."

"Even so," continues Marlowe, "I blame Shelley and Byron, and some of those French assholes he used to hang around with." Marlowe pleads with Eve to take care of herself, since he "can't bear a world without [her]." And so she departs (booking nighttime flights, naturally), leaving the writer to mill about Tangier with the ghosts of Bowles and Burroughs.

Back in Detroit, Adam is considered a reclusive rock god, despite having ghostwritten for classical composers such as Schubert; groupies who glimpse through his second-story window are onto his scent, ringing his doorbell during the night.

So, he's all too happy when his better half unexpectedly shows up on his decrepit doorstep. He takes her for a moonlit drive, away from the "rock-and-roll zombie kids."

After their tour of the dead city, Adam makes one of his midnight runs to the local hospital, to covertly purchase more of that O-negative from a sympathetic doctor (played by a wry Jeffrey Wright), who teases, "You're looking very pale there, doctor. Perhaps you need some sunlight."

This is before Eve's unpredictable younger sister, Ava (Mia Wasikowska), turns up from LA (or "Zombie Central," as Adam calls it)—and she's a lot less cultured when it comes to quenching her thirst.

But this isn't so much a movie about plot; rather, it's another exercise in mood and style, like Jarmusch's last picture, The Limits of Control, only more accessible and welcoming, wonderful though that was.

Jarmusch is clearly having fun here. Take the photos covering Adam's wall, strewn with the likes of Edgar Allan Poe, Mark Twain, Franz Kafka, Thelonius Monk, Billie Holiday, Buster Keaton and many more. Is the implication that they're all vampires, still toiling away, secretly creating art under others' names? It's a diverting thought, as amusing as much of this movie, and one half-expects to see Jarmusch's face on such a wall some day. ◆

JERRY GARCIA SYMPHONIC CELEBRATION, featuring Warren Haynes with the Boston Pops, plays Symphony Hall on May 13-14.

Music / Paul Robicheau

STILL TRUCKIN'

GOV'T MULE LEADER JUGGLES GARCIA TRIBUTE AND ALLMAN SWAN SONG.

"I REALLY LIKE TO BE BUSY," WARREN HAYNES says, and that's long been an understatement. For two decades, the guitarist/singer has led brawny blues-rockers Gov't Mule in addition to serving in the venerable Allman Brothers Band, which he plans to leave after this year. He's also fronted his own soul-rock outfit and joined surviving members of the Grateful Dead—most often Phil Lesh—on tour.

Now Haynes is launching his second Jerry Garcia Symphonic Celebration tour, performing the late Grateful Dead leader's music with orchestras across the country. Haynes will rejoin Keith Lockhart and the Boston Pops on May 13-14 at Symphony Hall. And, as at their summit last year at Tanglewood, they plan to reprise Garcia signatures like "Dark Star," "Bird Song" and "Terrapin Station" (originally recorded with strings) as well as his version of Irving Berlin's "Russian Lullabye." But Haynes says he also wants to rotate new material into the sets.

"I really wanted to pick the songs that became somewhat magical with the symphony [orchestra]," says Haynes, 54, who was enlisted for the project by guardians of Garcia's estate—and who plays the Dead guru's custom "Wolf" guitar at the concerts. "I don't think every classic rock songbook would benefit from a pairing with a symphony. Actually, I think very few would. But Garcia's music is unique in that way. It's steeped in history, and there's so much influence coming from many different directions. It's not just one-dimensional pop music."

Still, the orchestral collaboration didn't come easy, he says. "In the beginning, it was not just a challenge, but a little intimidating for someone like myself who's lived in this world of improvisation. Symphonies don't improvise. They read things to the letter."

"In the beginning, it was not just a challenge, but a little intimidating for someone like myself who's lived in this world of improvisation."

Working with three arrangers, Haynes struck a happy medium, having orchestras drop out or return on cue while his electric band—composed of drummer Jeff Sipe, bassist Lincoln Schleifer and backup singers Alecia Chakour and Jasmine Muhammad—improvises through the spaces. The arrangers also transcribed live Dead recordings for the orchestras, he says, "so it was written out, but from something that was originally improvised."

Haynes isn't shy of a conceptual challenge, as evidenced by Gov't Mule's latest album. "Shout! is the most diverse record we've made," he says of the fall 2013 release, which strays from the Mule's power-trio roots with splashes of reggae and punk. But the double album's unique angle was that Haynes sang the songs on one half before 11 guest vocalists—including Dave Matthews, Dr. John, Grace Potter and Steve Winwood—split turns on the same tunes. And it all began when Haynes thought "Funny Little Tragedy" was a song meant for Elvis Costello to sing.

"Once we had the idea to have one guest, then two guests and three guests, the idea just grew from there," says Haynes, who gave each artist his original version and made sure that each felt a personal connection with the song. "Some people took it further than others." In turn, Haynes says he avoided the temptation to redo his versions, but the cameos now influence the way he sings the songs live.

He says Gov't Mule (rounded out by drummer Matt Abts, keyboardist Danny Louis and bassist Jorgen Carlsson) should return to Boston later this year—and hopefully the same goes for the Allman Brothers Band. So far, their closest shows are both at the Mountain Jam festival in Hunter, N.Y., on June 7-8. Gregg Allman also headlines Lowell's Boarding House Park with his solo band on Aug. 9—and Haynes notes that Allman, 66, is sounding stronger since his bout of bronchitis curtailed the Allmans' March run at New York's Beacon Theater.

Both Haynes and Allman Brothers guitar foil Derek Trucks have given their end-of-2014 notice to focus on other projects, and Haynes says he'd be surprised if the group continued to tour. "This is something the entire band's been talking about the last two or three years, of picking the right time to go out on a high note," he says, "and I think most or all of us felt like the 45th anniversary would be the right time to do that." ◆

HARD-CORE DECOR

MY MODEST PROPOSAL FOR HOME IMPROVEMENT

I DON'T PRESUME TO CALL MYSELF AN AUTHORITY on interior design, but I've lived indoors for almost my entire life. And over the years spent inside various buildings, I've picked up a trick or two in the ol' decor game. So if you need design help but don't know where to start, here's a little cheat sheet.

I recognize that everybody has different taste, but my personal interior design philosophy is based on deception. I recommend you install lots of mirrors and paint your walls with trompe-l'oeil murals. On the door to a closet, hang a sign that says, "Grotto, Wine Cellar and Bowling Alley This Way." (Make sure it's locked.) Buy photo frames at Target, and then just leave in the stock photos that came with the frames. Realistically, those people are probably better looking than your family.

Whatever your budget, you'll want to designate a sizable chunk to the kitchen. In terms of materials, you definitely want granite and stainless, by which I mean granite cabinets and stainless walls. The professional kitchen setup is hot, so have a walk-in fridge stocked with 50 pounds of sea bass for tonight's special. What, you're storing the fish underneath the chicken? You're gonna kill someone, you donkey!

Don't forget to order a dinette set with chairs that are replicas of the Iron Throne from Game of Thrones. I just looked that up, and you can buy such a thing right at the HBO online store. They're $30,000 apiece, though, so you might have to trim your budget in other areas, like indoor plumbing and having a roof.

If you're decorating on a tighter budget, try an accent wall—one with a funny accent, like Balki from the 1980s TV sitcom Perfect Strangers. He was from the island of Mypos and said hilarious things like "Of course not, don't be ridiculous." Underneath all the lighthearted joking, that show offered serious commentary about how hard it is to have a foreign roommate.

Closets are an oft-overlooked but crucial element of smart design. If you don't have enough closet space, here's a neat life hack: Use your clothes as curtains. Now every window is a closet and every curtain is a pair of pants, thus freeing up the actual closets for your pottery equipment. I'm just assuming that, if you like this idea, you probably own pottery equipment.

Lighting is important. The darker it is in your house, the less money you have to spend on fancy decor. Hey, is that a Design Within Reach sofa that you just bumped into? Or is it something I found out on the sidewalk after the BU kids moved out for the summer? It's hard to say in the dusky light filtering in through my pants-curtains.

If I'm decorating a room and I reach a creative impasse, I like to read a magazine. (And look, so do you!) The New York Times Style Magazine's interior design issue tells us that there's a woman in Milan who makes parchment roses, each of which can take a week to finish. According to the magazine, "Local musicians use them to embellish their harpsichords." I hope she has an IPO, because that sounds like a very lucrative business, what with the big harpsichord craze these days.

If you don't have enough closet space, here's a neat life hack: Use your clothes as curtains.

I also read Coastal Living, so if you have a place near the water, I can offer a tip or two about beachy decor. For instance, give your walls a bit of nautical flair by hanging a painted oar or a row of colorful buoys. Then bolt some lobster traps to the ceiling. Now glue barnacles all over your coffee table and toss a bunch of seaweed on your TV. Commission a sculpture that can act as a visual anchor in your sunken living room, which is literally underwater. Put ropes everywhere. If houseguests ask what's up with all the ropes, reply, "Arrr, they're called lines." Finally, throw sand in all your sheets, replace your couch with a 13-foot Boston Whaler and wear a bikini top made of horseshoe crabs. Can you smell the bilge on the Nantucket ferry? You will when you light one of my designer bilge candles.

I know I'm just scratching the surface, but the takeaway is that your home should be a physical reflection of your own self-image, a deeply considered expression of your aesthetic sensibility—past, present and, yes, future. Or you can just walk around IKEA and then make it look like that. ◆

Soroff On / Reed Krakoff

OFF THE CUFF

THE ACCLAIMED DESIGNER DISHES ON LOGOS, LUXURY AND TIM GUNN'S LOVE LIFE.

VENERATED FASHION DESIGNER REED KRAKOFF, 50, WAS born and raised in Connecticut. A graduate of Tufts University and Parsons the New School for Design, he worked for iconic American brands Ralph Lauren and Tommy Hilfiger. In 1996, he assumed creative control at Coach, where he helped grow the company's annual sales from $500 million to $4 billion. He launched the Reed Krakoff Collection in 2010 and left Coach last year to concentrate on his own brand. From 2006 to 2010, he served as vice president of the Council of Fashion Designers of America, and he has been honored as the CFDA's Accessory Designer of the Year three times, most recently in 2012. He is also a published photographer. He frequently collaborates with his wife, the Paris-born interior designer Delphine Krakoff, with whom he has four children. He lives in New York.

JONATHAN SOROFF: I need a good man purse. When is Reed Krakoff going to do that?
REED KRAKOFF: Soon. I'm looking forward to getting into men's in the next couple of years.

What's the biggest payday in fashion? For most brands, typically, handbags. Leather goods. The margins are higher, and women tend to buy more bags than other things these days. They carry one every day, after all.

Three things that define good design? Desire is number one. You have to make someone really covet the object. Then it has to have functionality and be unique.

I saw your house in Elle Decor. Your wife did it, but I suspect you had some input, right? Yeah, my wife and I do all our interior design projects together. We also do the stores. And we're doing a project that's launching at the Milan Furniture Fair, which is exciting.

So who's the person in the design world whose taste you admire the most? There's no good taste or bad taste. There's taste that's developed, or not. I'm always interested in anybody with a unique approach, whether or not it appeals to me.

Icons? Jean-Michel Frank. He only lived until his 40s, and he died 73 years ago, but his work is still relevant and copied widely today. Also in the interiors world, Jacques Grange. My wife, Delphine. And then there's a very prominent landscape architect, Perry Guillot. His work is really fascinating to me.

Eras that you pull from the most? It's funny, I'm not really inspired by periods. When I do inspiration boards, there's never a historic theme. I don't do vintage. I'm really more about the design itself and working with fabrics and leather and materials. It's more an aesthetic that drives me.

So you're not a Pinterest guy? Not in that way. I might be interested in images that catch my eye, the way colors are combined or something's constructed, the way things are made. It's more an abstract or structural thing.

Fashion revival you're sick of the most? The '70s, by far. It just feels played out, and I don't think it was that great the first time.

Ideal scent? I designed one for my wife. One of the main components is vetiver, and then it has a citrus note to it, so it's not totally feminine.

What do you think is the secret to reinvigorating these old luxury brands? Every brand is unique, like people, and you really have to understand and pay attention to the personality and the history. I think that's key. And the second is a lot of time. It takes a while.

Who would be your ideal brand ambassador? Can I pick a few? We have a few who wear the clothing, carry the bags, wear the shoes. Michelle Obama for sure. Julianne Moore. Stella Tennant. As for someone we don't have yet, I'll name three: Cate Blanchett, Meryl Streep and Rooney Mara.

With iconic fashion pieces, like the Birkin or the Kelly bag, is it the mystique of the person who popularized it? Yes, but also that you can only get that bag from that brand, and it kind of breaks a rule. It's iconoclastic. It's not a specific detail or color.

What do you think is the most overrated fashion house right now? Good question. I'm hesitant to answer that. Why don't I just say anyone who sells too much logo product.

"There's no good taste or bad taste. There's taste that's developed, or not."

What's the end game for a design house? To stay relevant. There's no conclusion. It's just to stay relevant, which is incredibly difficult. The market evolves. The economy changes.

Fill in the blank: ___ is the new black. Cobalt blue.

Think gray is underrated? It's my favorite color. It's the color of my stores. It's a delicate color, but when it's right, it's perfect, because it can be so many things: cool, warm, masculine, feminine. It's seasonless. I love gray.

Tim Gunn hasn't had sex in over 20 years. Think it's time? It's so funny. I've known him a long, long time, when he was at Parsons. I'm an alum. But I'm going to leave that decision to Tim.

Is it weird when you're introduced to someone who only knows you as a brand? It's funny. When I was much younger, working for Ralph Lauren, he told a story about how he called the front desk one day, and they said, "Ralph Lauren." He said, "This is Ralph Lauren," and they were like, "Yes, it is." He had to explain to the person that he actually was Ralph Lauren. So yeah, it is funny to call the office sometimes.

Thing that most people waste money on, fashion-wise? Sale items. They think that just because it's a good deal, they should buy it, rather than because they love it. Better to buy one thing you love at retail than five things on sale.

Your definition of luxury? Time...with nothing that you have to do. ◆

THE LUXE BACHELOR PAD

By Kristin Paton Interiors

Cambridge-based designer Kristin Paton created this living room with a sophisticated gentleman in mind. "He may be a writer or in film—but he makes enough money to afford Tom Ford suits," Paton says. A pair of art deco-inspired chairs and British artist Ian Bishop's hand-forged lamps provide striking lines, while plush pillows and a hand-knotted Tibetan rug lend a welcoming vibe. And the artwork comes from ARTcetera, AIDS Action Committee's annual benefit auction. Have a few walls to fill? Paton cites MassArt's sales as another great source for works by local artists at a range of price points.

MIDCENTURY MODERNIZED

By Eleven Interiors

"Mixing true vintage and contemporary pieces allows the space to push the envelope," says Michael Ferzoco of the South End's Eleven Interiors. A lesson here: Don't be afraid to draw from different eras, materials and price points. The leather-wrapped 1940s table on the right is topped with a reproduction of a 1950s lamp from Italian design house Zanotta; West Elm stools round out the look. The base of the coffee table also dates to the '40s, but the granite top is new and adds a dash of modern color that pops up throughout the room. "The amethyst-colored accessories enhanced the neutral palette with their polished jewel-toned glamour," Ferzoco adds.

TECH MEETS TRADITION

By Duffy Design Group

"Technology of today meeting the craftsmanship and artistry of yesterday" is how South Boston-based designer Dennis Duffy describes this one-of-a-kind room. He tapped Carl Grues of 22 Designs to construct the custom LED cocktail table, a conversation starter capable of being programmed to display countless colors and patterns. Local artists supplied both the hand-blown sculptures atop the table and the cement cones that serve as its base. Meanwhile, gorgeous digitally printed fabric from Donghia Textiles features in the window treatments, draped traditionally with handmade leather tiebacks.

BUILDING A Better TOMORROW

A local architecture and design firm is creating energy-efficient, healthier homes without sacrificing an ounce of aesthetic.

Lindsay Tucker

SOAK UP THE SUN: Solar panels and south-facing windows enhance the home's energy efficiency.

KITCHEN CONFIDENTIAL: Low-V[illegible] cabinet finishes and Energy Star appliances upgrade the room.

SUSTAINABILITY HAS BEEN a buzzword for years now, but in the realm of home design, there's a long way to go. Despite increases in LEED-certified buildings and Boston's E+ Green Building Program, an initiative put forth to spur regenerative multifamily development, designers and architects say they see plenty of policy roadblocks. Until there are more financial incentives to go green, the shift toward environmentally responsible development will be slow, says Michael LeBlanc, a principal at local design firm Utile. "There are countries like Switzerland where if you build to certain more-sustainable specifications you can get a 100-year mortgage, for example. The government there understands the value of having a house that will only have to be built once over 100 years as opposed to three times," he says. "It allows people a much more reasonable mortgage and a sort of legacy to leave to their family—there are all kinds of benefits. My question for financial institutions is, how can they, through creative mortgages, make the financing of these projects easier and more attractive?"

Despite such hurdles, public awareness is gradually starting to change, catalyzing a demand for eco-conscious construction. Just ask ZeroEnergy Design (ZED). Located in the Financial District, this eight-year-old firm has been at the forefront of sustainable building, garnering design awards from the Boston Society of Architects, Mayor Menino and EcoHome magazine.

"The term 'green,' for us, encompasses more than just sustainability and lower carbon emissions," explains ZED co-founder Ben Uyeda, who's also a founder of FreeGreen, billed as the world's largest provider of customizable green house plans. "It's also about the overall health effects of the home. It's as much about lifestyle and shaping healthy habits as it is about putting solar panels on your roof," he says, emphasizing that many building materials contain toxins and allergens unknown to most people.

Here's a look at what's possible when you throw out the rules of conventional construction while dramatically decreasing your home's eco-footprint.

Built in the early 1950s, this formerly Cape-style home in Needham suffered from a lack of spaciousness, with small, dark and drafty rooms, low ceilings and no garage. Few updates had been made since the homeowner, an avid photographer, purchased it in 1989. ZED got involved in 2010, drawing up plans for a much-needed renovation and expansion.

To address the cramped interior, architect and ZED managing director Stephanie Horowitz designed an upper-level addition and an attached two-story garage with a photography studio above, more than doubling the existing living space from 1,176 to 3,100 square feet. The first level now features an open floor plan, with the kitchen flowing into the sunny living room.

That kitchen was updated with formaldehyde-free maple cabinets with a low-VOC finish. (For the uninitiated, VOCs, or volatile organic compounds, are potentially toxic chemicals found in many materials, including wood stains.) Energy Star appliances replaced old, worn-out models, and a hybrid induction range was introduced to quickly and efficiently heat pots and pans. Water-conserving fixtures were also installed throughout the home.

Natural light has long been important to the client as an artist; now it's also instrumental in warming the home. The living room, which now enjoys a double-height ceiling, was outfitted with large, south-facing floor-to-ceiling windows that allow light to penetrate deep into the back of house. The upper level benefits as well: ZED opened up the two bedrooms on the second floor to overlook the living room, offering welcomed views and sunshine.

Upgrades were also made to the heating and cooling systems, which are supported by improved insulation. "Often, older homes have little to no insulation depending on age," Horowitz says. For this project, she and her team decided to use continuous foam insulation: two layers of two-inch-thick rigid insulation around the entire exterior of the building, including the frame, which is more effective than the traditional cavity insulation that lines most homes. (As Horowitz explains, at least 25 percent of a typical wall consists of the wood framing, which, in most cases, means less than 75 percent of each wall is actually insulated.) Here, a cellulose insulation made of recycled newsprint was introduced in conjunction with the continuous insulation, helping the house to become virtually airtight.

"THE TERM GREEN, FOR US, ENCOMPASSES MORE THAN JUST SUSTAINABILITY AND LOWER CARBON EMISSIONS."

Electric heat is cheap to install but generally quite costly from month to month. In this case, however, with the upgraded window placement and airtight closure, the heating demand was dramatically reduced, making electric heat a reasonable investment. To further reduce waste, a special heat recovery ventilator was installed to pull fresh air into the home while transferring the existing warmth to the chilly incoming air.

Although it's been less than a year since the homeowner moved back in, the folks at ZED estimate that the home will be 88 percent more energy efficient than a home built to today's energy codes—and the existing house had been far less efficient than what's standard today. "While the new home is nearly three times larger," says business development principal Adam Prince, "it has a net annual use of between 0 and -5 percent of the old home's energy consumption." In fact, with help from the solar panels that were installed on the new roof, it's anticipated that the home will operate long-term with net-zero energy usage, producing as much energy as it consumes over the course of a year—and helping ZeroEnergy Design live up to its name.

DIY DECOR

NOT IN THE MARKET TO REMODEL?

Easy projects from HomeMade Modern can brighten your home while decreasing your eco footprint

"A couple years ago, a friend gave me a fantastic bottle of whiskey, which we drank, and ultimately laughed all night," Uyeda says. "Now it sits on my desk with a beautiful succulent growing out of it. It is nice to know that the byproduct of a night of drinking can be a smart garden."

"Making something yourself is one of the greenest things you can do," Ben Uyeda says. He should know: Uyeda is also the director of HomeMade Modern, a web resource featuring detailed instructions for creating sophisticated DIY home furnishings. Launched in 2012, the site has guided projects on five continents and inspired a book, slated for release early next year. "When you want to eat healthy, you make your own food," Uyeda says. "In the same respect, if you're on a budget, you can make your own housewares out of recycled materials; you can source locally and reduce waste associated with manufacturing and shipping."

GET STARTED WITH THESE INDUSTRIAL-CHIC DESKTOP PLANTERS.

MATERIALS:

- Glass cutter (We like the "Generation Green g2," made in the U.S. from recycled aluminum.)
- Various glass wine bottles. "Keep extra on hand since you're bound to break a few when you first try cutting," Uyeda says. Mix and match colors for contrast.
- Adhesive remover like Goo Gone to help get rid of sticky label residue
- A small pot or tea kettle
- Sandpaper
- Pliers
- A cork
- A drill

STEP ONE Choose and clean your bottles

Soaking the bottles overnight will loosen the labels, but if you're in a hurry just use a dull knife to scrape off what you can; then liberally apply Goo Gone and submerge the bottle in water for five minutes. The rough end of a sponge or a rag should wipe clean any remaining gunk.

STEP TWO Score

The glass cutter makes this step easy. Just follow the instructions in the manual to create a scratch mark around the entire circumference of the bottle. "Where you cut it will depend on the bottle itself, but make sure to leave enough of the bottom half to fit the neck of the bottle inside it," Uyeda says.

STEP THREE Separate

Lay the bottle down horizontally in the sink. Slowly drizzle boiling water over the score mark while carefully rolling the bottle so it's heated evenly. Once it's hot, run cold tap water over the entire score line until it splits. "The key is in raising and lowering the temperature right along the score line," Uyeda says. "It normally takes two to three times before it will fully separate." Don't be discouraged if your bottle breaks: "Different thicknesses and qualities of glass behave differently," he says. "About 50 percent of them will crack and break during this step!"

STEP FOUR Sand

Using 80-, 100- or 120-grit sandpaper, smooth out the freshly cut edges of the glass.

STEP FIVE Cork it!

"The cork allows you to control drainage," Uyeda says. "I recommend drilling a 1/4th-inch-diameter hole in it, using vice lock pliers or a clamp to hold it in place."

After that, you're done! Put your pieces together and find some greenery at a nearby florist. Happy planting!

Hirsute Hootenanny

A hair-raising fundraiser

THESE DAYS, IT SEEMS like you can't turn a corner in Boston without running face-first into some dude's big, bristly beard. Once the domain of only the very masculine, unruly face fur is now the discriminating gentleman's fashion accessory du jour. But what of the beard's more dignified brother, the mustache? On Cinco de Mustache, the 'stache will have its day once again. An annual throw-down to benefit the MSPCA, the party will feature live music, margaritas and, of course, mustaches. Mustachioed men should come rocking their best mo for a chance to win prizes, including gift certificates from local restaurants. (Faux facial hair is encouraged for the ladies and the follicle-challenged.) The 'stache bash goes down May 3 at the Hard Rock Cafe. / Alexandra Cavallo

PERFORMING ARTS

Edited by Alexandra Cavallo

GEEZ, AZIZ Fans of NBC's Parks and Recreation know him best as nightclub-hopping, Brooks Brothers boys' collection-wearing "ladies man" Tom Haverford, but Aziz Ansari has been in the business of being funny far longer than he's been shirking his office duties in the Pawnee parks department. A veteran of the Upright Citizens Brigade, the pint-sized comedian has been perfecting his brand of snappy, irreverent stand-up while starring in popular sketch shows like MTV's Human Giant and cameoing in blockbuster flicks like This Is the End. Catch him when he performs several shows from April 29 through May 5 at the Wilbur Theatre. / Alexandra Cavallo

HEIST MINDED

Argo isn't the only movie with a plot that turns on a faux film production. Also based on real events, 1950s-set dramedy Closer to the Moon follows a crew of Jewish Communists who rob Romania's National Bank by pretending to be filmmakers—only to be forced to re-enact the crime for a propaganda film after their arrest. It screens at the MFA during Jewishfilm.2014, the National Center for Jewish Film's 17th annual festival. Spanning several venues, the diverse program includes 18 other films, among them Rock the Casbah, a look at the lives of four Israeli soldiers during the 1989 Intifada, and Quality Balls: The David Steinberg Story, a documentary about the comedian with commentary from fellow funnymen Jerry Seinfeld and Larry David. See the lights, challah and action May 1-10. / Hannah Weintraub

Reviews by Brett Michel

Belle ★★★ Director Amma Asante's second feature is inspired by the story of Dido Elizabeth Belle (a luminous Gugu Mbatha-Raw), the mixed-race daughter of Capt. Sir John Lindsay (Matthew Goode in a cameo). Despite being illegitimate, she's raised in a loving household by her aristocratic great-uncle Lord Mansfield and his wife (Tom Wilkinson and Emily Watson, both in fine form), yet the darkness of her skin prevents her from fully participating in the traditions of her noble standing. While her white—and also illegitimate—cousin Elizabeth (Sarah Gadon) is readied for marriage, Belle is headed for a life as a wealthy spinster. But as formula dictates, she meets an attractive young idealist, John Davinier (newcomer Sam Reid, in an unfortunate wig), a lowly vicar's son. It's all captured in a candy-colored digital palette that's distressingly become the norm, flying in the face of filmed costume dramas of the past—but then, this is a story driven by change, with Davinier and Belle challenging her great-uncle to do right by his role as lord chief justice, helping bring an end to slavery in England. (At Coolidge Corner.)

Captain America: The Winter Soldier ★★★½ Literally defrosted after 70 years, Steve Rogers (Sudbury native Chris Evans), aka Captain America, is finding it difficult to reconcile his black-and-white worldviews with the shadowy grays of 2014. Having been given darker duds (and perhaps Batman's tailor) to suit the times, he reluctantly reports to Nick Fury (Samuel Jackson), his handler at S.H.I.E.L.D., the government spy agency that assembled superhero supergroup the Avengers. Thankfully, unlike recent Marvel Comics-derived movies headlined by teammates Iron Man and Thor, Cap's superb second solo outing is less an ad for next summer's Avengers: Age of Ultron than a throwback to the paranoid thrillers of the '70s. I'm looking at you, Three Days of the Condor. So, apparently, were directors Anthony and Joe Russo, who cast that film's hero, Robert Redford, in a pivotal role here. When an attempt is made on Fury's life, exposing a cancer that's destroying S.H.I.E.L.D. from within, Cap proudly dusts off his comfy old red, white and blue outfit; the overgrown boy scout turns fugitive, answering only to his sense of right and wrong as he sets things right. America, eff yeah. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Divergent ★½ If you're looking for a satisfying screen reunion of the talented leads of The Spectacular Now (Shailene Woodley and Miles Teller), move along. Here, Teller's a spectacular dick to Woodley, and he remains on the sidelines in the dystopian Chicago of director Neil Burger's boilerplate adaptation of Veronica Roth's young-adult novel. Society has been divided into easily digestible, post-apocalyptic factions: Erudite the intelligent, Abnegation the selfless, Amity the peaceful, Candor the honest and Dauntless the brave. Tris (Woodley) is Abnegation-born, but she's reached the age when an aptitude test will determine whether she's better suited to another faction. Turns out, she's secretly Divergent, a fit for multiple factions (or none), which makes her a threat to Jeanine (Kate Winslet), coup-crazy leader of the Erudite. Our heroine eventually falls for Four (Theo James), part of Radioactive the hot. OK, this last one isn't really a faction—although, absurdly, James' character really is named Four. Nevertheless, teens will find the Brit attractive, more so than Ansel Elgort, soon to be seen snogging Woodley in The Fault in Our Stars, who plays her brother here. Now that is divergent. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Finding Vivian Maier ★★★½ Vivian Maier loved collecting stories. The lifelong nanny hoarded newspapers, carting piles of them from home to home, family to family, with instructions that they never be touched. She was drawn to darker reporting, to tales of murder and secret lives. What her various employers and wards didn't know is that this eccentric woman had a secret life of her own. In death, she's attained a reputation as one of the most accomplished street photographers of the 20th century, having taken more than 100,000 photographs that went unseen—until amateur historian John Maloof purchased some contents of her storage locker by chance. Maloof and co-director Charlie Siskel's engrossing documentary chronicles his efforts to learn about the mysterious loner behind the photos. He follows a trail that leads him down a rabbit hole of conflicting accounts of the cagey recluse, as those who knew her realize on camera just how little they actually did know. It's a great story, one that Maier probably would have loved—if she weren't at the center of it. (At Kendall Square.)

For No Good Reason ★★★ "I really thought what I would do, if I ever learned to draw properly, was I would try to change the world," Ralph Steadman says at the start of Charlie Paul's illuminating documentary about the 77-year-old British artist. We should consider ourselves damned lucky that Steadman never quite learned from others' traditional illustration techniques—otherwise we may have never been exposed to his crazed use of spattered ink, the rare technique he uses to start his drawings. And, in a way, he did change the world, as his longtime collaboration with Hunter S. Thompson gave life to gonzo journalism. What would Fear and Loathing in Las Vegas be without his demented drawings, he asks narrator Johnny Depp, a close friend of the late Thompson who memorably played the author in Terry Gilliam's unhinged adaptation of the gonzo classic (and not-so-memorably appeared as Thompson's surrogate in The Rum Diary). Depp interviews Steadman while bearing witness to some of that unorthodox creativity. Steadman's style, he reveals, was spawned from a 1970 trip to Manhattan's Skid Row. It shows, wonderfully. (At Kendall Square.)

The Grand Budapest Hotel ★★★½ Wes Anderson's latest confection is a sprawling valentine to a place that never was, an Eastern Europe nestled between the two world wars. Sixteen-year-old Zero Moustafa (newcomer Tony Revolori), the newly minted lobby boy at the titular mountainside retreat, becomes the most trusted friend and companion to M. Gustave (Ralph Fiennes in a gloriously profane performance). Fiennes plays the dandy, "liberally perfumed" concierge for the famed hotel, a physical creation that ranks with The Royal Tenenbaums' townhouse as a believably lived-in space of the imagination. The lightning-paced story encompasses the murder of a dowager (Tilda Swinton), the theft of a fictional Renaissance painting, more murders and the most impressive cast you're likely to encounter in cinemas all year. There are too many stars to list, but I must note that Anderson's priceless returning repertory players Bill Murray and Bob Balaban have even less to do here than they did in George Clooney's The Monuments Men, which seems downright criminal. But then, I'm greedy. When a film contains such ornate riches, you simply want more. (At Boston Common, Fenway, Kendall Square, Coolidge Corner, Somerville and in the suburbs.)

Heaven Is for Real ★★ If you doubt that this painfully earnest new film from director Randall Wallace (writer of Braveheart) may be a crass cash-in on the ticket-buying power of Christians, consider that it's also a none-too-transparent pitch for Spider-Man, another property from Sony Pictures, the studio behind this film adaptation of pastor Todd Burpo's book of the same title. Colton (strong newcomer Connor Corum), the 4-year-old son of Todd and Sonja (Greg Kinnear and Kelly Reilly, both good), is surrounded by swag featuring Marvel's web-headed hero, from the posters hanging on his wall to a bedside Spider-Man lampshade. He carries his wall-crawling action figure everywhere, finally dropping Spidey when he loses consciousness as he's wheeled into life-threatening surgery. Even then, Sonja clings to the toy, while Todd gets angry at God. Colton survives, but he claims to have visited heaven. Could it be true? The declarative title leaves little room for debate, although the real shocker is not that Jesus looks exactly like Kenny Loggins, but that Colton's savior isn't Peter Parker. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Jodorowsky's Dune ★★★½ In 1975, Chilean director Alejandro Jodorowsky announced his intention to adapt Frank Herbert's science fiction novel Dune—despite the small detail of his never having read it. Thus begins Frank Pavich's enthralling documentary, a chronicle of the (un-)making of one of the greatest movies never made. "Jodo" dreamed of giving audiences a "sacred experience"—mimicking the effects of LSD, without the actual intake—so just imagine the films we'd be watching today if Dune had become the influential blockbuster of our time, rather than Star Wars. Set to star Jodo's 12-year-old son, Brontis, alongside Orson Welles, Mick Jagger, David Carradine and Salvador Dali, with music by Pink Floyd and designs by H.R. Giger and Jean "Moebius" Giraud (who later funneled their talents into Ridley Scott's Alien), this Dune only exists as a massive volume of storyboards. They're glorious. An adaptation of Dune was eventually filmed; Jodo said it gave him "a pain in my heart, because if anyone can do it, it's David Lynch." Then, he saw Lynch's disastrous failure—with unexpected glee. Now, see what might have been, and still may be. (At Kendall Square and Coolidge Corner.)

Mr. Peabody & Sherman ★★ Another cartoon you grew up with gets the overblown, 3-D, CGI treatment, as the "Peabody's Improbable History" segment from Rocky and His Friends and The Bullwinkle Show trips through time into 2014. Director Rob Minkoff (The Lion King) updates the cartoon classic that featured a Nobel-winning talking beagle and his "pet boy"—and it's for the dogs. As bad as that pun is, there are worse ones in this film, which I concede is appropriate, since the 5-minute-long TV adventures created by the late Ted Key dealt them like cards. Alas, little of the dry wit from Mr. Peabody and Sherman's original journeys into the past remains, replaced by a screenplay that makes the common franchise-building fumble of focusing on an origin story. Ty Burrell does a serviceable job voicing Peabody, but not casting, say, John Hodgman or David Hyde Pierce to recreate Bill Scott's vintage vocal performance seems like just one of many missed opportunities. If only there really were a WABAC machine, then maybe someone could go back and fix this mutt of a movie. (At West Newton and in the suburbs.)

Muppets Most Wanted ★★★ "We're doing a sequel," sing the Muppets at the start of their new movie. James Bobin returns to direct Kermit, Miss Piggy, Gonzo and Fozzie for a second go-round, and he's canny enough about the self-deprecating charms of the childhood favorites to have the gang continue crooning about how sequels are "never as good." Maybe so, but this eighth film to headline Jim Henson's critters is still silly fun. Prodded by their new manager, Dominic Badguy (Ricky Gervais), they decide to tour Europe, boarding a train bound from L.A. to Berlin (just go with it). Once there, hecklers Statler and Waldorf read a poster announcing the performance. "Die Muppets? Looks like they've put up our reviews early!" Tina Fey and Ty Burrell co-star, as the Muppets unwittingly become entangled in an international crime caper spearheaded by Constantine, the "world's most dangerous frog"—and Kermit's doppelganger. As the song goes, this isn't quite as good as the last one, but that one didn't have Danny Trejo and Ray Liotta singing and dancing in a Boyz II Men prison number. (At Boston Common, Fenway, Somerville and in the suburbs.)

Noah ★★½ Darren Aronofsky's gonzo retelling of this Old Testament tale eschews things like rain lasting for 40 days and 40 nights in favor of creatively licensed additions like giant rock men who speak with the gravelly voice of Nick Nolte. God bless the crazy/brilliant Black Swan writer-director for giving us Russell Crowe's Noah, a clearly unhinged man suffering from psychotropic hallucinations that prompt him to build a massive ark (with the aid of those rock men, obviously) in preparation for a flood. Two animals from every species arrive, sauntering on board and promptly falling asleep. You won't suffer the same fate, wide-eyed as you witness cannibalistic men swarm the ark, only to be swatted away and/or stepped on by the rock people. Peter Jackson would approve—especially as Ray Winstone's Tubal-Cain stows away, surviving by eating some of the livestock (these poor creatures became extinct, I guess). When this barbarian tries to turn one of Noah's sons (Logan Lerman) against his dad, we're treated to a climactic fight scene, gladiator-style. Sacrilicious. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Transcendence ★ In the new Captain America movie, there's a great scene where the Cap

encounters a long-dead enemy whose consciousness has been kept alive after it was uploaded into a supercomputer. The sequence is playful, smart, funny and ridiculous in equal measure. Transcendence, the lamentable directorial debut of Christopher Nolan's longtime cinematographer, Wally Pfister, is only ridiculous, taking two hours to convey what the superhero sequel effortlessly accomplishes in 10 minutes. Johnny Depp coasts as Dr. Will Caster, a rock star in the field of artificial intelligence and the target of anti-technology extremists who will do whatever it takes to stop him, even if that means shooting him with a radioactive bullet. (Only in bad science-fiction, folks!) Caster has weeks to live, so his wife (Rebecca Hall) toils tirelessly to transfer the genius' humorless mind into a computer network, terrifying consequences be damned! A modern-day variation on The Lawnmower Man, this is one of those films that fears technology without understanding it; it's as alarmist as 1995's The Net, and just as brainless. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs)

Under the Skin ★★★★ Director Jonathan Glazer (Sexy Beast, Birth) returns after a decade-long absence with a movie as strange and wonderful as anything Nicolas Roeg might have made in the '70s. There's more than a touch of The Man Who Fell to Earth, plus a lot of Performance, with Scarlett Johansson giving one of her most effective as a girl who fell to earth. Only her extraterrestrial's not a girl, exactly, even though a big selling point for this film is the promise of seeing Johansson fully nude. Despite this fact—and the four-star rating above—it must be stressed that this movie has as much mainstream appeal as Roeg's cited films. (And be honest: You've never heard of them, have you?) But for adventurous moviegoers, Glazer's free-wheeling adaptation of Michael Faber's sci-fi novel, scored with otherworldly, buzzing strings by Mica Levi, offers the shock of discovery, and of the new. As Johansson's unnamed alien succubus drives the Scottish countryside in search of forsaken men, you may find yourself lured into this mysterious figure's van right alongside them. (At Boston Common, Kendall Square and Coolidge Corner.)

ON THE ROAD AGAIN

There ain't no rest for the wieked, but alt-roek road warriors Cage the Elephant did take some time off to hit the reeording studio. After a five-year touring binge, the band took a short break to focus on their third studio album, Melophobia, writing on their own as individuals and then regroup-ing, all the while avoiding listening to other musie recordings. (Maybe that had some-thing to do with the resulting title, whieh means "fear of musie.") Now, 10 traeks later, frontman Matt Shultz is ready to return to the stage for his famously energetie live performances. Cage the Elephant ride their rock 'n' roll caravan into Boston with British indie rockers Foals on May 4 at the Orpheum Theatre. / Ashley Rossi

MUSEUMS & GALLERIES

Edited by Sarah Hagman

BLUE PRINTS Philippe Charles Jacquet left behind a 20-year career in architecture to focus on painting, but he hasn't stopped designing buildings entirely. Marked by his signature fantasy-meets-reality style, many of the self-taught Parisian artist's latest pieces feature a solitary house set against an expansive seascape, inspired by the Brittany coasts in France. He lavishes special attention on these structures, often plotting them out on paper before transferring them to a slightly surreal backdrop, evoking both isolation and a sense of vast possibility. Set sail on a sea of imagination from May 3 to June 1 at Axelle Fine Arts Galerie. / Rima Butto

IN HER WORDS

At 22 years old, while still in college, promising writer Marina Keegan already had a job lined up as an editorial assistant at The New Yorker. An illustrious career seemed sure to follow, but days after graduating from Yale, a fatal car accident on Cape Cod brought all those plans to a screeching halt. While her own story ended far too soon, the young writer's spirit lives on in The Opposite of Loneliness, a posthumous collection of Keegan's essays and stories compiled by those she inspired. Appreciate these words to live by on May 1 at the Brookline Booksmith. —Abagail Sullivan

ARTFUL AFFAIRS

MISSIVES FROM THE JET SET

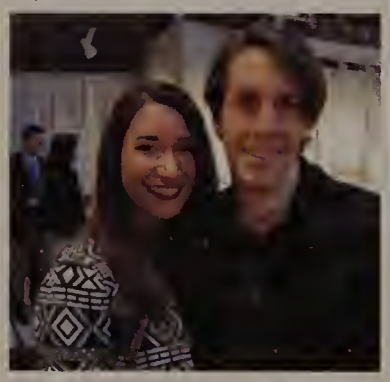
The Boston Ballet Ball fashion show

Jonathan Batista and Irlan Silva at the Ballet Ball

Jessica Schmitz at the Ballet Ball

Joseph and Laura Seele at the Ballet Ball

Kevin Costello, Mike Morris and Caitlin Flynn at the AD20/21 gala



Melissa Popovic and Rand Lemley at the AD20/21 gala

Matthew Pidge and Brandon Patrick-Sigh at the Handel and Haydn Society Ball

WHERE'S W.C. FIELDS WHEN YOU NEED HIM?

It's America's oldest continuously performing arts organization, so it's not surprising that the Handel and Haydn Society has it down pat when it comes to throwing a shindig of epic proportions.

The Society Ball (which The Improper proudly sponsored) was held at the Mandarin Oriental and attracted a strictly A-list crowd that included co-chairs Cecily Tyler and Jane Manilych, honorees Sandra Nicolucci and Thomas Kelly, newlywed hotties Michael and Adam Oliveri, the ever-fabulous Alli Achtmeyer and her adoring husband, Bill, party pair Debbie and Bob First, mustachioed muchacho Sherif Nada and the swanlike Mary, culture vulture Jared Bowen and his handsome other half, Brandon Patrick-Sigh, smoke show Matthew Pidge, blond beauty Britten Hartnett Tyler and her doting husband, Wat, and so on and so forth.

Not surprisingly, cocktails and dinner were accompanied by beautiful music, and after dessert there was dancing cheek-to-cheek.

Overheard by the bar: "I rationalize drinking gin martinis by concentrating on the nutritional value of the olives."

EVERYONE'S A CONNOISSEUR

If goggling at paintings, fine furniture, jewelry and objets d'art is your idea of a good time, you ought to have been at the Gala Preview for AD20/21, a showcase of art and design from this century and the last, held at the Cyclorama.

A benefit for the Boston Architectural College, the evening attracted the likes of the ridiculously gorgeous Melissa Popovic and the absurdly handsome Rand Lemley, design avatar Cheryl Katz, arts patrons Erik and Jody Saarmaa, dashing Colombian architect Juan Guillermo Uribe Rubio, the irresistible Ren Blake, banking babe Dyan Goodwin and her debonair husband, Rob Scrio, fishmonger extraordinaire Roger Berkowitz, design buff Eric Portnoy, banking bigwig Carlos Lopez, human teddy bear Mike Morris, discerning dealer Andrew Spindler and South Ender Russ Schleipman, who arguably had the show's coolest item: a $75,000 art nouveau telescope/sundial that looks like it belongs in a Maxfield Parrish painting.

With such rarefied taste in the room, it's no wonder there were some amusing conversations. There was the dealer who explained a painting by saying, "It's Venetian plaster, on aluminum, with a very expensive German pigment to get that vibrant color. He actually loses money on them." To which the philistine she was talking to replied, "Then why does he do them?"

Another guest remarked upon a piece of mid-century furniture: "$50,000... and yet it's so IKEA."

However, the bitchiest comment went to the person who said, "I know exactly where that painting's going to end up. A decorator with no imagination is going to put it over the mantel of a house on either Nantucket or Martha's Vineyard."

BALLERS...

Boston Ballet recently gave Cecil Beaton's sets for My Fair Lady a run for their money, transforming the Park Plaza Castle into a black-and-white fantasy-land, with a reflective black runway-turned-dance floor that bisected the room.

Guests at the Ballet Ball, which marked the company's 50th anniversary, continuously murmured, "Wow!" as they arrived, although a bumpy carpet did snag a few heels. The uber-swanky crowd included such dazzlers as petite beauty Nina Fialkow and her VC hubby, David, Beacon Hillions Audrey and Steve Reny, soignee Brits Ruth and John Littlechild, the bewitching Sarah Mars squired by Newtonian yogi Adam Lewis, Hungarian knockout Ildiko Varhelyi, the babe-alicious Rosemary McCready and her affable other half, Rick, board chair Jack Meyer and the lovely Beth, co-chairs Stephanie Brown and Jessica Schmitz (in an Oscar-worthy gown), gubernatorial hopeful Jeff McCormick with his brunette babe, Christine, statuesque beauty Diana Rockefeller, the always delightful Steve Weiner and Donald Cornuet, and a man who had been paddle-boarding with Laird Hamilton in Hawaii the day before.

Dinner was accompanied by a fashion show featuring 50 years of costumes modeled by the dancers, while dessert was paired with an edgier show choreographed by company member Rachel Cossar. Then all hell broke loose when everyone took to the dance floor (or the bar).

As one man summed it up: "This is one of the few black-tie things where I don't mind getting all sweaty." ◆

SHELL OUT

WHEN I WAS GROWING UP, MY family moved around a lot, packing up seven times before my 15th birthday. Some moves were across town, some across the country, but the place that felt most like home, hands down, was Provincetown—a weird and wonderful place to be a 10-year-old. I don't remember having a math textbook, but I and the 14 other kids in my grade were each assigned a mentor. Mine was a local actress, so I got to warble arias from H.M.S. Pinafore and peek backstage at Pippin. I got to partake in the town's outsized arts community in other ways, too—taking classes with a sculptor who created otherworldly works from driftwood and bird bones, playing the Ghost of Christmas Future in an otherwise decidedly adult production of A Christmas Carol, which held rehearsals in a back room at the Crown & Anchor bar. I only lived in Provincetown for three years, but I've been drawn back ever since.

There's something special about peninsulas and islands, about end-of-the-road towns, about the people they attract and keep. For our Cape & Islands issue, we tapped some of these locals—from a Wellfleet surfing instructor and a chef who serves cod banh mi on Commercial Street to a Nantucket film buff and a Vineyard coffeehouse owner—who share what they love most about where they live. Elsewhere, Julia Rappaport profiles the husband-and-wife team behind a restaurant that draws the likes of the Obamas to a rural corner of the Vineyard. Andrew Rimas heads to Brewster to check into Cape Cod's largest resort. And I catch up with a Boston boutique that's setting up shop in Provincetown—one more reason I'm looking forward to visiting this summer. I hope this issue helps you find inspiration for your next Cape or Island escape, too.

Room 68, 68 South St., Boston, and 377 Commercial St., Provincetown (617-942-7425) room68online.com

Plenty of Bostonians daydream about a second home on the Cape; this month, the owners of Jamaica Plain design boutique Room 68 are making it a reality, setting up shop in a 1,200-square-foot space on busy Commercial Street. "I felt like Provincetown would expose Room 68 to thousands of people who travel from all over New England, as well as the world," says Brent Refsland, co-owner of the three-year-old JP store with Eric Portnoy. Initially, the pair planned to open a pop-up in P-town to promote their online store. They started scouting spaces last fall—and weren't having much luck. In fact, they were just about to head back to Boston when they connected with Jamie Krysziewicz, who was closing her clothing store, Silk & Feathers, after 30 years in business. "She called just as we were literally pulling out of town," Portnoy says. "We came back and looked at the space, and it was perfect."

So perfect, they decided to open a permanent location. Portnoy explains, "[Provincetown] being America's oldest artist community, it's as part of our community as you get." That artistic tradition is reflected in the store itself, an airy white-washed space that will stock emerging lines familiar from the original location as well as new finds—from LA brand Bend's wire furniture to San Francisco designer Tina Frey's hand-sculpted tableware—but also add a dedicated gallery space for rotating exhibits. "We're in the East End of Commercial Street, known for its art gallery district," says Refsland, who tapped Boston sculptor Venetia Dale for the opening show and planned the May 23 grand opening party to coincide with Provincetown's Friday gallery stroll.

Room 68 isn't the only Boston biz to set its sights on Cape and Island crowds. In recent years, Nantucket has welcomed outposts from Newbury Street fashion stalwart Serenella, South End and FiDi wine shop Brix and the Met Restaurant Group, which opened Met on Main on the site where owner Kathy Sidell had her first job scooping ice cream. Expansion, of course, isn't always easy, especially hours away in a highly seasonal destination. Ten Tables proprietor Krista Kranyak recently sold her Provincetown outpost to focus on the original JP and Cambridge eateries and her Grass Fed burger concept, noting online that she's "delighted to return to all the wonders of P-town as a tourist."

But Room 68's owners have high hopes that their vision will resonate in Provincetown. "Hopefully, we'll have everyone who walks through intrigued by something they see, whether it's a $20 water bottle or a beautiful necklace or one of the larger pieces," Refsland says. And during peak season, Portnoy adds with a laugh, "We will probably have more people in a day than we get in a month at our other location." / Jacqueline Houton

AKA REDUX

LINCOLN BISTRO REOPENS WITH FLAIR.

HIS INFLUENCE: Chris Chung has revamped the menu at AKA Bistro.

IT WAS A LONG, HARD WINTER FOR EVERYONE, but the folks at Lincoln's AKA Bistro had it a little tougher: A December flood forced it to close until the first week in May. The French/Japanese eatery reopened entirely under the culinary direction of chef/co-owner Chris Chung, who had previously split the kitchen duties with French-focused Christian Touche. Chung, a veteran of Uni at Clio, has reinvigorated the menu, incorporating Thai and Korean influences. He's now cooking up the likes of salmon confit salad with quail egg and sesame vinaigrette; crispy pork belly with Thai curry, rice vermicelli and pea tendrils; lobster bistro rolls with citrus-Dijon dipping sauce; and steak tartare with smoked tomato-bone marrow remoulade. Of course, you can still enjoy the semi-secret special of French-style roasted chicken ($16) from 5:30 to 6:30 pm Monday through Thursday.

BEYOND THE PALEO

THE PALEO DIET IS increasingly popular, and so-called super foods have been trending for awhile, so it was only a matter of time until a cookbook merged the two. Powerful Paleo Superfoods lets you kill two (organic, free-range) birds with one stone. Written by nutritionist Heather Connell and local author Julia Maranan, this guide to paleo-approved proteins, fats, fruits, vegetables and greens makes a convincing case for adopting many of the diet's precepts. This means giving up many gastronomic pleasures—bread, ice cream, most chocolate—as well as foods commonly recognized as healthy: tofu, yogurt, grains and legumes. Fortunately, the recipes are plentiful and enticing. Collard wraps with spiced aioli dipping sauce are light and tasty, while rosemary lamb chops with basil chimichurri add a fresh spin to an otherwise ordinary meal. Beyond the recipes, you'll likely learn something new from the book, which delves into the benefits of eating grass-fed organic beef, the science of balancing Omega 3 and Omega 6 polyunsaturated fats to minimize inflammation and details of how grapefruit can interact with prescription medication.

LIQUID ASSET

THIS HOUSE AIMS TO FUSE GALLERY AND RESTAURANT.

MANY CUSTOMERS WAIT A FEW WEEKS before visiting a new restaurant, giving the staff time to work through kinks. But beware: Those who wait too long will miss out at Liquid Art House. The restaurant/art gallery's opening exhibit, Street Art – Outside In, is only open until June 17, when it will be replaced by another show. It's all part of founder Ruta Laukien's vision for the just-opened spot, which anchors the Arlington, a new apartment complex on the edge of Bay Village.

"I called it liquid because it's a place that's going to constantly change. I think about it like a theater, where every time you come in, you're going to have something a little bit different," Laukien says. "We're really focusing on making art approachable. I love art. I'm very passionate about art, but I'm not an art connoisseur. I find galleries, museums can be a bit intimidating, especially for younger people."

While the opening exhibit's street art focus might seem meant to appeal to a younger crowd, it also reflects LAH's goal of turning the space into a canvas for local and international artists. With pieces by Syria's Tammam Azzam, Brazilian artist L7M, Iranian expats Icy and Sot and even local artist Coyote Painting Walls, the former home of the Boston Consolidated Gas Co. headquarters has been filled with fiery social commentary.

There's plenty of heat in the kitchen, too, with chef Rachel Klein (OM, Asana) taking on a dinner menu, a bar menu and a special tasting menu that will be inspired by each exhibit. The shiny red rotisserie, Lulu, has garnered early attention, but it's the D'Artagnan chickens, which feed on scraps from Thomas Keller's much-acclaimed Per Se restaurant in New York, that have the staff crowing. The dumpling section of the menu will nod to Laukien's Eastern European background, and the desire to highlight emerging artists will be complemented by wine director Shaun Snow's selection of small-production wines from countries such as Macedonia.

It's not only the food and drinks that are for sale at LAH. All of the art can be purchased (using an app called Clio Muse), and you can even custom order the 11-foot chandelier from Murano or the community table, which both grace the bar area.

Whether visitors are buyers, browsers or bon vivants, Laukien hopes the "House" part of LAH's name will convey a welcoming atmosphere.

"Nobody should be intimidated to walk in," she says. "Browse through the art and sit down and have dinner—whether it's at a chef's table with a seven-course tasting menu or a burger at the bar."

Q&A

COMING UP ROSES

Actress Mayim Bialik, known for her roles as a nerdy neuroscientist on The Big Bang Theory (and in life!) and the title flower-hatted teenager on Blossom, will receive an honorary degree during Boston University's commencement on May 18.

BESIDES BEING A REAL-LIFE NEUROSCIENTIST, DO YOU RELATE TO YOUR CHARACTER ON THE THE BIG BANG THEORY AT ALL? To some extent. I mean, she's socially awkward and I am, too, in a slightly different way. What we do on the show is really for comedic effect. I was kind of a late bloomer, and obviously Amy is as well. I think Amy's a person who appreciates unusual people, and I think you could definitely say that of me as well.

HAVE YOU EVER HAD TO EXPLAIN SOME OF THE SCIENTIFIC TERMS TO THE OTHER ACTORS? No, you kind of want to leave actors alone with that stuff. They don't think it's cool when other people tell them what's up. I mean, the job of an actor is to pretend that we're all sorts of things, so everyone was doing just fine before I came along. They absolutely don't need me explaining anything, and, for the most part, they don't have to be terribly interested in the "real science stuff" because they're actors and they don't need to know—or want to.

DO YOU THINK BLOSSOM'S HATS WILL EVER MAKE A COMEBACK? Fortunately or unfortunately, I have seen them on some young hipsters.

IS THERE ANYTHING YOU MISS ABOUT '90S TV? I think in a lot of ways life was simpler, both for TV and not, so I guess I miss that. When I look back at Blossom, I looked like a kid, 'cause I was a kid. And I guess, on behalf of young actresses, I miss being able to look like a kid, 'cause I don't think young girls get to do that a lot anymore.

DID YOU EVER HAVE A CRUSH ON JOEY LAWRENCE? No, I did on Michael Stoyanov, who played the older brother on Blossom. That was more my type, the brooding, mopey type. / Hannah Sheinberg

Drink of the Moment

FRONTIER SAMURAI

PRICE: $12

INGREDIENTS: House-smoked Bulleit, yuzu and rhubarb vanilla syrup

INVENTOR: Jon Mendez, Trade beverage director

ORIGIN: Mendez tested this concoction at a cocktail competition, and its crowd-pleasing taste earned it a spot on Trade's menu. The name plays on bourbon's association with early American settlers and the citrus fruit yuzu's ties to Japan. "Where else would these two flavors meet?"

FLAVOR: The bourbon is smoked with rosemary and cedar to enhance its sweetness and is balanced out by bittersweet citrus and fruit.

PAIR IT WITH: Something spicy, like chicken meatballs ($10), that can match the drink's depth.

ALTERNATIVES: Explore other frontiers with new cocktail program TRADEcreates. Sunday through Wednesday, bar guests can fill out a card, noting their usual go-to drink and checking off two of 15 adjectives listed (from spicy to boozy to tropical), which the bartender will then use to create a custom cocktail, priced at $10. Mendez hopes the program's structure will encourage customers to venture outside their comfort zones, offering options without overwhelming: "If you describe your palate, the things that you like, the flavors that you're looking for, [then] you put that in the hands of the expert and let them guide you through it."

SECOND ROUND: "We have people who specifically fill out the exact same characteristics and order it from different bartenders to see what they get," Mendez says.

THIRD ROUND: Bartenders write the recipe down for customers, so you can enjoy it again—and again. / Sarah Hagman

Purveyors: Sweet Somethings

The Tulgeywood, a dark chocolate square speckled with crushed almonds and dried apricots, captures Chilmark Chocolates in a nutshell. For more than 30 years, the Martha's Vineyard confectionery has produced high-quality chocolates by hand, each one touched with whimsy and tied to a special place. Varieties such as the Menemsha Mints and Tashmoo Truffles honor some of the island's most cherished locales, while the Tulgeywood alludes to Camp Jabberwocky, the nearby summer haven for people with disabilities, where shop founders Jan Campbell, Mary Beth Grady and Allison Burger all worked as camp counselors—and where they recruit fellow chocolatiers. / Elizabeth Bomze

A SUMMER TRADITION

BLOCK PARTY

When Assembly Row's Legoland opens on May 23, there will plenty of reasons to visit—more than 3 million to be exact. That's how many bricks fill the Somerville attraction, which is geared toward kids ages 3-10, but may be just as fun for adults. No one knows this better than Ian Coffey, 26, who landed his dream job as the Discovery Center's master builder after a series of building competitions.

Coffey thinks adults will enjoy visiting the Miniland re-creation of Boston, which includes a Fenway Park replica that took 450 man hours to construct, but he expects they will be especially attracted to the kid-free evenings of grownup activities that will take place on the third Wednesday of each month. He and his team are planning themed nights, which begin June 18 and aim to tap into the toy's ageless appeal. (See: The Lego Movie's box office records, the recent Simpsons episode featuring a Lego Springfield and Karl Lagerfeld's block-inspired handbag for Chanel.)

A sense of nostalgia, Coffey says, is part of the draw. It's certainly true for the New York native, who fondly recalls breaking in new sets in his backyard sandbox, which led to a basement full of Legos in his parents' house. After bugging him for years to clear it out, his mother has changed her tune: It's now a touring site for her friends' grandchildren. Still, beware the injuries that also transcend age. ("You step on them. You kneel on them, vacuum them up," Coffey says.) But, at Legoland, at least the mess isn't in your living room. / Sarah Hagman

Good Eats: Dumpling Ground

For Cantabrigians still mourning the loss of Thailand Cafe, there's a bright spot at the other end of Central Square. Dumpling House, sibling to Gourmet Dumpling House, set up shop last month on Mass. Ave. and serves all the Chinatown favorites, including more than a dozen types of dumplings. The headlining Shandong variety is particularly good, with seven oblong pouches neatly hand-crimped to order, seared hard on one side to produce a thick crust, and stuffed with a pork-shrimp-and-leek meatball so savory and juicy, you might mistake them for a relative of the broth-filled xiaolongbao. / Elizabeth Bomze

ASIAN INFUSION: Cambridge just gained a tasty new addition with Gourmet Dumpling House's sibling location.

SPOT ON

A PET DETECTIVE DOGGEDLY INVESTIGATES A SUSPICIOUS DEATH.

Panthers Play for Keeps* by Clea Simon
Published by Poisoned Pen Press, 250 pages, $15
The author lives in Massachusetts.

THE FOURTH BOOK IN CLEA SIMON'S Pru Marlowe Pet Noir series finds Pru training a service dog—a good gig for an animal psychic. But while out for a walk, Spot leads her to a woman's mauled and mangled body. The victim is Mariela, the unmourned maid of the arrogant Richard Haigen (Spot's intended owner, who's going blind) and his much-barked-at and Botoxed wife, Dierdre. Some people claim there's a panther to blame—an unlikely suspect, since this mystery is set in the Berkshires.

Against her better judgment, Pru starts investigating; soon she has not one violent death to solve, but two. Her cat, Wallis, and other animals act as her co-detectives, whispering clues and warnings, though she doesn't always listen. Also on the case: Pru's semi-beau, homicide detective Jim Creighton. Their scenes together nicely showcase her toughness and tart humor, as do her interactions with several creepy, plot-thickening characters, including a sinister gangster. But this engaging heroine also has a sweet side, drawn out by dogs, cats and one lyrical leopard.

FROM PAGE 39: I'd felt bad for Haigen, despite an introduction that bordered on hostile. I knew the type, from my city days. Tall, broad rather than fat, and with a booming voice that demanded to be heard, he was a former master of the universe now exiting the known galaxy. His coke-bottle glasses were the obvious indicator of his changing status, despite boxy frames just a little too hip for his jowled face. Whatever crimes he'd left behind, he was trying for a new start: country gentleman in a bucolic setting refurbished with all the mod cons. That faded as I watched him barking at a wife, who clearly was in over her head, and grumbling at the pretty maid when she startled him with a tray. ◆

Most of the villas are on the Villages side, which offers ideal golf access, while Mansion-side lodgings boast the private beach. Shuttles run between the resort's two sections.

The resort's boutique, She Sells, stocks designer labels, gifts for wedding parties and an impressive haul of Vineyard Vines products.

Snack cabanas are available if you need a poolside hot dog or a daiquiri, but more solid meals can be had across the street from the Arbor Pool at the Linx Tavern. Order the lobster roll.

LIFE'S A BEACH

THE VARIED PLEASURES OF CAPE COD'S LARGEST RESORT

On summer mornings, the Old King's Highway through Cape Cod flows with a stream of out-of-state traffic, windows unrolled to the spongy Atlantic air. Pouring through Brewster, past the folksy general store and whitewashed inns, the current slows to gawp at a splendid blaze of lawn, a binge of real estate slashed from the waterfront. At its top, a manor. Beyond, the azure sea.

This is Ocean Edge, one of Cape Cod's most frolicsome resorts. The reasons for this include—but are not limited to—its private beach, numerous pools and $8.5 million Nicklaus Design golf course. It really depends on how you like to frolic. A convincing case can be made for retreating there with a loved one, a room key and an al fresco dinner reservation for two on the terrace.

Guests have 429 acres in which to play, but start at the Mansion. Built in 1912 to replace an earlier, more flammable manse, it's an elegant composition of leaded glass, Italian woodwork and period furnishings. The reception area is the old billiard room, and carved busts of Shakespearean characters lend it a clubby feel. Dining rooms are dressed in wood paneling and portraiture, giving breakfasts a period drama setting. Unlike meals in Downton Abbey, however, these have an emphasis on fresh baked goods instead of arch dialogue.

Downstairs, instead of working-class Britons transitioning through a period of social upheaval, you'll find a functioning pub. Even if you're just stopping here for a wedding—even if you're the bride—do not miss eating a Guinness-glazed burger with bacon and fried onion strings at the bar. All the pub sandwiches are superlative, as are the local fish and chips. But the star of the resort's dining program, arguably the star of the entire resort, is Ocean Terrace upstairs. Given the barest murmur of acceptable weather, opt to dine on the enormous outdoor patio overlooking the Atlantic. This is one of the most picturesque spots on Cape Cod Bay, with open sky and an enveloping blue horizon. Savor the view over a cocktail at the South Beach-style bar, or from a table if you can draw your attention away from dishes like swordfish with brown butter espuma.

Edwardian manors aren't to everyone's taste, and during the past seven years Ocean Edge invested $50 million in upgrades. The crowning addition is the Presidential Bay Collection, a cluster of villas that captures the Cape Cod aesthetic without dipping into chintz. So you get whale pictures and a nautical palette, Colonial details and custom furniture, but you never feel like the designer's trying to recreate the ambience of a lobster-boat jetty. Every iota is deliberate, from the hue of the marble countertops to the stitching on the European shams. Villas come in various permutations of bedrooms and views, but they all involve modern kitchens, patios and quick access to the private beach.

The resort boasts about the warmth of its ocean, and with reason. During low tide, the bay's shallow water poaches into a comfortable bouillabaisse. There are no coastal dramatics like that of the National Seashore, and the mudflats are prime territory for little marine biologists—turn the kids loose on the hermit crabs and kick back in a beach chair for an afternoon.

More adrenalized guests can use the resort's bike shop as a starting point to explore the 26-mile Cape Cod Bike & Rail Trail. Two tennis complexes and a fitness center and cardio room provide ample activity for anyone tormented by the memory of last night's molten chocolate lava cake. All impulses can be indulged here, even healthy ones.

That's Ocean Edge's specialty: the replacement of worry with impulse. You know you're on vacation when the day's most perplexing question is, where would you like your beach chair? ◆

HOOK & LADDER

THE REGION'S MOST ICONIC SEAFOOD CHAIN GETS A SHINY NEW LINK.

LEGAL CROSSING
558 Washington St., Boston (617-692-8888)
legalseafoods.com

IT'S BEEN A BUSY DECADE FOR LEGAL SEA Foods. Launching new dining concepts faster than Bravo cranks out Real Housewives spinoffs, the restaurant group long known for chowder, steamed lobsters and baked scrod has expanded with a vengeance. These days, the well-heeled sip rooftop cocktails and dine, white-tablecloth style, on the upper floors of Legal Harborside in the Seaport, then shop a fish market on the street level below. Suburbanites sip herbal infusions at cocktail-centric Legal C Bars, while conventiongoers sample quirky fare like habanero chicken wings and kimchi-smothered dogs at LTK in Southie. There's even an Italian-leaning Legal Oysteria on tap for Charlestown this spring.

If those concepts were artistic explorations, consider the team's latest debut, Legal Crossing (LX), its self-selected "Greatest Hits." Opened in March in Millennium Place, a gleaming high-rise across from the Opera House, LX offers spice, nods to Asian cuisine and fashion-forward cocktailing—a mashup of any sibling restaurants' strengths that seemed to suit the urban Ladder District location.

Most of the time, the combo is harmonious. The core of the menu, seafood, is impeccably fresh. Whether you order the well-spiced fish tacos with pickled cabbage ($14) at lunch, or shareable dinner offerings like crab cakes with tangy mustard hollandaise ($16) and tempura-fried mussels ($9), the star ingredient is always as tender, sweet and/or flaky as it should be. Fried oysters ($13) are briny and fantastic, presented on heaps of rock salt with pickle relish and BBQ aioli.

The small plates are where the kitchen tends to experiment most, with mixed results. Paprika shrimp with Chinese sausage ($13) taste muddy and bland. Bang Bang cauliflower ($6), however, is wildly delicious, the florets battered and tossed in a sweet and spicy sauce—a Chinese-takeout fix for the carb-averse.

There are times, though, when LX seems afraid to challenge diners, as though one too many dishes have been proclaimed "weird" and sent back. On the lunch menu, a take on Korean bibimbap with kimchi is renamed a Korean rice bowl with pickled vegetables ($16), and our server offers to let us skip the raw egg (we don't). We're also warned about the spicy sauces, and about the screaming-hot stone pot that lends a great crust to everything it touches. Our server also advises us to order the dish's tuna on the side to keep it from overcooking. That part is sound advice: The raw fish, with a simple soy and sesame glaze, is mild and clean-flavored, and perfectly seared.

Consider the team's latest debut...its self-selected "Greatest Hits."

Whatever you order, service makes all the difference. At the bar, help is attentive and efficient, with bartenders backing each other up when things get slammed on a Saturday. At another meal, the LX team jumps into high gear when one of our dining companions reveals a food allergy. As each plate is delivered, the runners confirm that it's problem-ingredient-free.

A weak server, however, can lead an otherwise decent experience far off-key. Is the "cauliflower risotto" with the Everything Tuna (market price) actually a risotto, or is it cauliflower? It's risotto, one server swears. (It's not.) What wine might pair well with the roasted cod with Finnan haddie brandade ($28)? She pulls out a printed cheat sheet and points, and we end up with a glass that's far too light for the plate's smoky potato mash. Her cocktail recommendations get boiled down to "sweet" and "not sweet."

As for those cocktails, LX tries hard to be edgy. Offerings like Cold Tea (a beer-based cocktail) and Glitter & Shame ("nice melons... so fresh, so clean," the menu reads) nod to the neighborhood's debaucherous late-night past, and vague descriptions seem intended to spark a dialogue between diner and server. This approach works when the staff is well-versed in cocktail ingredients and techniques. But it breaks down when a server awkwardly fumbles through the drink menu, or when the barkeeps are too busy to explain.

LX can feel like many restaurants in one: the fast-and-fun bar, the low-key bar tables, the dining room, quiet in evenings but packed for weekday lunch. It's a jumble—but then, so is the crowd, a blend of theatergoers, tourists, post-work drinkers and Ritz-dwelling empty nesters. If early hiccups can be remedied, a mashed-up concept may be just the right thing for this mashed-up neighborhood—and just the right thing for a fast-changing brand. ◆

Q: MY FRIENDS SAY THEY GET "FILLER" IN THEIR FACE, WHAT EXACTLY DOES THAT MEAN?

A: Fillers are injected directly into facial lines in the mid and lower face to "fill in" wrinkles by replacing volume.

Most fillers are a gel that is made from hyaluronic acid; a substance that is produced naturally by our body. Brand names include Juvederm, Restylane, Perlane and Belotero. Another brand name is Radiesse, which has a different composition.

Fillers are used in the lips to plump them up, in the grooves that run from the nose to the corner of the mouth (naso-labial folds), in cheeks and lines around the mouth.

Filler injections actually don't hurt due to the addition of lidocaine, a numbing agent. The results are immediate: a more youthful appearance with no downtime and the results can be expected to last 6 to 18 months.

Don't be afraid to give fillers a try: the key is a conservative approach. The results can be stunning!

THE AMAZING SPIDER-MAN 2 ★½
Starring Andrew Garfield, Emma Stone, Jamie Foxx, Dane DeHaan, Colm Feore, Felicity Jones, Paul Giamatti, Embeth Davidtz, Campbell Scott and Sally Field. Screenplay by Alex Kurtzman, Roberto Orci, and Jeff Pinkner. Directed by Marc Webb. At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.

Movies / Brett Michel

TANGLED WEB

THE LATEST SPIDER-MAN ADVENTURE SWINGS AND MISSES.

AFTER HELMING ONLY TWO SPIDER-MAN movies, Marc Webb has accomplished a feat that took Sam Raimi three tries to achieve with his 2002-07 trilogy: He's made a truly awful film with The Amazing Spider-Man 2, worse than his previous entry's unnecessary retelling of ol' web-head's origin story.

Still, for all its detractors, 2012's The Amazing Spider-Man improved upon Raimi's pictures in significant ways. Liking what they saw in Webb's small-scale romantic comedy, (500) Days of Summer, the Spider-Man producers correctly presumed he could handle Peter Parker's emotional fragility, his teenage angst and the romance that's crucial to the wall-crawler's character. Andrew Garfield's fidgety nerd captured the Peter from the pages of the Marvel comic more than Toby Maguire's drippy Spider-Man alter ego. Likewise, Emma Stone's Gwen Stacy was a far more appealing and luminous soul mate than Kirsten Dunst's Mary Jane Watson, and no upside-down kiss was needed to sell the chemistry that Garfield and Stone share, onscreen and off. Throw in an old pro like Sally Field as Peter's beloved Aunt May, and that's just icing on the superhero cake. (Martin Sheen's Uncle Ben was pretty great, too; pity he had to die, but with great power, and all that...)

What's more, refinements in visual effects have led to a Spider-Man who looks utterly believable, not weightless like Maguire's clearly CGI stand-in. In fact, Webb decided to use real stuntmen wherever possible, which informed the performance of the computer-animated Spider-Man. In this sequel, the sight of our hero swinging through Manhattan's urban canyons in stereoscopic 3-D truly is amazing, down to the rippling cloth of Spidey's signature red-and-blue long johns, which evoke the comic's costume more than ever before.

So where did things go wrong?

Right at the opening scene, with an ill-advised action sequence set aboard a private jet. It's a continuation of the previous film's prologue, where a 6-year-old Peter Parker bids goodbye to his tearful parents, Richard and Mary (Campbell Scott and Embeth Davidtz), who flee their Upper West Side home after a break-in. Peter never knew why they abandoned him—leaving him with his aunt and uncle in Queens—only that they died soon after under mysterious circumstances. If only it could have remained a mystery to viewers.

So where did things go wrong? Right at the opening scene, with an ill-advised action sequence set aboard a private jet.

Picking up with Richard and Mary on their chartered plane to who-knows-where, a man dressed as a flight attendant emerges from the cockpit; Richard notices the thug's hands are bloodied. A pistol is pulled and a fistfight ensues. Mary takes a bullet, while Richard manages to upload a Very Important File from his laptop as they roll along the walls of the out-of-control plane. It's worth noting that we don't actually see the Parkers die; don't be surprised if this prologue endlessly continues in every subsequent not-very-Amazing sequel.

With a budget north of $200 million, a director like Webb only has so much control, and seven producers are a lot of masters to answer to, especially when two of those producers are the (recently disbanded) writing team of Alex Kurtzman and Roberto Orci, who have had their hands in series from the Transformers movies to the Star Trek reboot (which also strayed off course with the second installment). They co-scripted this film with Jeff Pinkner, a writer on TV's Lost. The three certainly lost their way with this sequel, which is franchise-building at its absolute worst.

The poster for The Amazing Spider-Man 2 promises "his greatest battle begins." That battle is obviously a corporate one; Sony Studios envision churning out two more sequels and numerous spinoffs featuring classic Spider-Foes as a means to keep their business afloat. It's a nasty enterprise, and this film suffers greatly for it. An unfocused mess, it's overstuffed with three villains: Electro (Jamie Foxx, who should be embarrassed), the Green Goblin (an underutilized Dane DeHaan) and the Rhino (an atypically awful Paul Giamatti cameo).

There are fleeting moments that work. When he's in action, Garfield's Spider-Man perfectly embodies the cocky, quippy character from the comics—something Maguire never accomplished. Scenes between Garfield and Stone, or Field, pack a real punch, even if their dialogue does them no favors. Nor does the dramatically flat music, a rock-based melange credited to Hans Zimmer and the Magnificent Six, a sonic "supergroup" including Pharrell Williams and the Smiths' Johnny Marr.

The previous film finally gave Spidey hummable theme music (courtesy of James Horner, much missed here), something Raimi's films lacked. In its place, we're treated to the rhythmic, chanting, internal thoughts of Electro, set to dubstep beats. Imagine Superman's Lois Lane anthem "Can You Read My Mind?" reconfigured for ADD-addled hipsters.

They're the only ones who might enjoy this. ◆

KURT VILE AND THE VIOLATORS play Boston Calling on May 25.

Music / Paul Robicheau

PRETTY DAZED

PHILADELPHIA ROCKER LEAVES FORKING FREIGHT BEHIND TO REACH DREAMY ZONE.

One senses adrenaline in Kurt Vile's voice when he answers the phone. But the singer/guitarist isn't busy rehearsing with his band the Violators. He's minding his young daughters at his parents' Philadelphia house on the eve of a birthday party.

"It's the perfect seesaw I guess," Vile says of balancing his priorities as both a family man and a musician touring in support of one of 2013's best albums, Wakin on a Pretty Daze. "The hardest part is getting it together to go out again."

His band's getting it together now for the festival season, starting with the May 25 finale of Boston Calling's spring rock fest at City Hall Plaza and winding back on July 26 for the Newport Folk Festival. While he regularly swaps between electric and acoustic guitars, Vile doesn't plan to approach Newport differently.

"Bob Dylan already got through it at Newport for going electric in '65, so I think we can pretty much do whatever we want," says Vile, 34. "We're going to be coming straight from opening for Nick Cave & the Bad Seeds in Philly, so that tells me I'm going to be pretty jacked and not necessarily feeling too folky."

Not that Vile presents himself as an anthemic rocker. He's more of a slow-burn guy, especially on Wakin on a Pretty Daze, unspooling melodic guitar jams that are laconic in tone and pace, bridging the dreamy and the dynamic around his drawled musings. Even when lengthy songs like the album's title track, or "Goldtone," approach the 10-minute mark, he floats through chord progressions as though time has been suspended.

"When I'm playing my music, that's a pretty natural state, so I'm just in the zone," Vile says. "It's hypnotic in its own way, but you need to have these subtle changes to change the mood for a second and then go back... If you're recording the song and you're really feeling it, and bobbing your head, it's awesome."

Vile began bobbing his head as a teenager, adopting the dual influences of classic rockers like Neil Young and Tom Petty and noisy indie upstarts like Pavement and Dinosaur Jr. Yet his father, a bluegrass lover, first gave Vile a banjo at age 14. "The first stringed instrument I learned was like an open tuning, and it's got that high drone string," Vile says of qualities that he soon applied to guitar.

"I wasn't going to college but people my age were, so I met some cool people, like record nerds, who would sit around and party and listen to more obscure music."

Inspiration from fingerpicking icon John Fahey also echoes through "Too Hard," a droll tune written when Vile's first daughter was born during a heavy touring cycle. "I'll promise not to party too hard," he sings, then drags the last two words in refrain before slyly adding, "It's too hard."

Vile got hip to Fahey during a hard period in Boston, where he lived for two years after high school. While his wife sought a master's in poetry from Emerson, he drove a forklift at an air freight company. "That was pretty brutal," says Vile, who at least earned enough money for musical gear. "I wasn't going to college but people my age were, so I met some cool people, like record nerds, who would sit around and party and listen to more obscure music."

When he and his wife returned to Philly, Vile enrolled in community college, "a direct result of the two years of working that crappy job, thinking I had to go to school." He lasted one semester and got back on a forklift at a brewery, but his musical woodshedding in Boston had built confidence. He made lo-fi recordings with friends on home turf and met kindred spirit Adam Granduciel, helping him launch the War on Drugs while Granduciel contributed to Vile's work.

"People would come up to me like 'Oh, you're the guitar player in the War on Drugs'—they still do it," Vile says of confusion over his role in Granduciel's band. "I was always pursuing my solo career, but we benefitted from each other."

One last misconception to clarify: Kurt Vile isn't a stage name, or his parents' nod to composer Kurt Weill. "They did not know who he was at the time, so it was just a coincidence," he says. "But I don't think it was a coincidence... cosmically." ◆

ART OF THE MATTER

A LOOK AT THE CREATIVE LIFE, THROUGH TWO LOCAL TALENTS.

THE CREATIVE LIFE IS OFTEN A SOLITARY one, focused on a singular vision, though there's a bond that unites most people who create for a living. Years ago, actor friends in Hollywood referred to everyone not in that business as "the citizens," as if no one outside it could ever understand. As a writer, I appreciate this. Even one of my best friends often says to me, "You must be thinking about sex all the time. Your novels are full of it."

I say to her, "Those are the characters talking, not me. Can't you get that novelists create characters who speak for themselves, not the author?"

She cocks her head and says, "I ain't buying it."

A good many of you are interested in the world of creativity. You want to write, paint, sculpt or act, or you may already be in one of these professions. I thought I would tell some tales about creativity, focusing on two special artists, in my life in various ways.

I have had a painter friend named Andrew Stevovich for many years. We met when I bought one of his paintings in 1974, a few years after he graduated from Rhode Island School of Design. But his interest in art had started much earlier. "I was drawing in crayon on my parents' wallpaper when I was 3," he says. "I believe that you can show signs of passion at a very early age. Then you have to be lucky to have someone older recognize the passion."

In these days of zero attention span, it seems tougher than ever to find mentors. Stevovich was lucky. A teacher at his high school in Washington, D.C., inspired him. "He used to tell me, 'If this painting were mine, I'd...' and he'd gently nudge me with encouragement into seeing things I hadn't seen before in my paintings," Stevovich recalls. "He collected songbirds. They sang in our painting classes, along with Mozart records."

Another mentor immersed him in color, and he fell in love with classical style and the Quattrocento; his artist heroes were Giotto, Whistler, Gauguin, Botticelli. He spent hundreds of hours at the National Gallery, not believing that humans today could paint as wondrously as the artists he worshipped. But he drew inspiration from them, while striving to find his own way. "I'd never show anyone any work in progress, only the finished product, and I swore early I'd never take a commission," he says. "I'd only do what pleased me."

I first encountered his work at his debut solo show, at the Alpha Gallery on Newbury Street. My wife and I wandered in on a Saturday, and his vibrant colors jumped off the canvas at me. I couldn't believe what I saw on the walls.

I love the drawings of Daumier, the paintings of Bosch, artists who understand the absurdity of life and the foibles of human nature. Stevovich was in his 20s, and he painted satirically in oil. I was so excited to find someone so young who could reflect irony on canvas. One large painting showed a man and a woman in a laundromat, both in formal clothes, staring out at us. She's in a low-cut gown; he's in a dinner jacket, reading from the Social Register. It cost $1,000, and I couldn't afford it. But I had to have it, and the owner said I could take a year to pay it off. I was naive about the concept of paying something off over time. Now that's how college costs are treated, and I hope that expensive experience gives you as much pleasure as my Stevovich Laundromat painting.

Now I've known Stevovich for 40 years. He's represented by Adelson Galleries, with a location in New York and a shining space in the South End. His colors are more vibrant than ever, his paintings still satirical and full of whimsy, his characters all around us: in subways and in casinos, in cafes talking on cellphones, in their rooms alone. His final advice to the young? "Don't listen to other people. I use 500-year-old technology in my paintings. But I try to reflect today."

KATHERINE HOUSTON IS A CERAMIST, A BRILLIANT creator of special porcelain sculptures. And, like Stevovich, she honors the past. Houston is her professional nom de plume. "Part of my everyday world sees me as a mother of four, keeper of the house. I took a pseudonym to get me away from me," she explains. An art history major in college, Houston drew and painted, then gave it up for years, until she and her husband rented a flat in London. One day, she noticed some porcelain pieces in a store window. She loved the colors and the delicacy of the work and thought they were surely Chinese exports or Meissen or Sèvres, the finest of that craft. The shopkeeper told Houston, "No, they're done by a lady in Pangbourne about an hour away."

"This was my 'eureka' moment," she says. "Both my grandmothers had porcelain, one from China, the other from France. I used to play by a river when I was little, molding with river clay, all alone, lost in little girl thoughts." The artist in Pangbourne was a true Lady, the Marchioness of Aberdeen. She invited Houston and her husband to dinner and became her mentor. "No mucking about. There is no convenient time to go to work," she told Houston. "Just do it."

And Houston did. She concentrated on 18th-century paintings of fruits and vegetables and began to create gorgeous pieces in three dimensions, working with as many as 300 different colors. She uses 12 to 14 applications of low-fire overglaze, whereas commercial porcelains only use one or two. The result: richly colored works that look like Dutch Master still-life paintings, only in 3-D, brilliant from every angle. And they never fade. Her flowers and vegetables sit on mantels and serve as centerpieces; they can be found in private collections, museums like the Peabody Essex and stores like Gump's, Bergdorf Goodman and Neiman Marcus.

"There are penalties for the creatives among us," Houston says. "I love the pressure of difficult projects, but there's a price for it. I've had four surgeries on my shoulder. But the joys of creating beauty allow me to lose myself in my art." Stevovich would say the same about his painting, about the lonely life, in which you never really know who will appreciate your work.

"Luck," Houston quotes, "is when perseverance meets opportunity."

That's what all of you with creative dreams should understand. ◆

CAREER DAY

MOST JOBS HAVE PERKS, BUT NOT ALL OF THEM INCLUDE K-Y JELLY.

My wife, Heather, is about to graduate from nursing school with an RN degree. I'm very proud of her, but also of myself, because now I can wearily exclaim that I've put someone through college. Whenever anyone complains about the cost of college tuition, I can say, "Oh, you don't have to tell me! Believe me, I know. I just put someone through college." Tuition was actually quite reasonable, and most of it was covered by a scholarship. But let's not quibble over the degree of my nobility. That's distasteful.

Nursing is not Heather's first profession. And, while it's a wonderful, socially valuable field, I'll admit that I was content when she sold copiers for Konica-Minolta. She usually hit her quota, which meant that I got to go on the annual reward trip. If that sounds stuffy, remember that Konica-Minolta is a Japanese company, and nobody parties harder than Japanese people on a business trip. One year we went to Dublin, where we saw a U2 tribute band play inside the Guinness brewery. It was an open bar and our drink tickets were in the form of fake money printed with the CEO's face on it. I'm pretty sure that sort of thing isn't going to happen much now that she's working in a dermatology office.

Before Konica she worked for Johnson & Johnson, a gig that also had its upsides, like a company car with a trunk full of K-Y Jelly. After that, she had a job with a medical laser company, which meant that she always had a bunch of demo lasers in our laundry room. One of them looked like the robot from Short Circuit, if the robot from Short Circuit could zap off your pubes.

Since she's now working at a derma practice rather than, say, an emergency room, you'd think the daily menu of medical problems would be pretty sedate. But already her work stories are way more disturbing than they were when she was hawking copiers. The other day, she came home and said that a guy had shown up in an ambulance; they took a dressing off his chest to reveal a tumor that looked like the Alien. (She didn't describe it in quite those terms, but this is how I envision it.) The dermatologist was like, "Hey dipwads, how about you take this guy to the hospital? This is a dermatology office, not an alien-removal office." (She also did not describe his reaction in quite that way. But that's what I'd say, if I were an exasperated dermatologist.) The upshot is that she now gets to wear Grey's Anatomy-brand scrubs and have friends show her their moles and ask, "Does this look weird?" Now that's authority!

Heather's career-hopping has made me a little bit sorry that I haven't explored any advanced degrees or alternate careers. Sometimes I pick up the course catalog from the local community college and say, "Welding! I should take that course. That would be a cool thing to know how to do." And then within a few minutes I've talked myself out of it. Welding? You need to buy that dark mask and welding equipment, and then there are the permits, I imagine. Plus, with all the plastics these days, there's less to weld and, oh, never mind.

From time to time I ponder pursuing some sort of prestigious academic path. For instance, two of my editors have won writing fellowships, at MIT and the University of Michigan, respectively. One of those guys is 6-foot-5, so you could say he's a long fellow. With the ability to unleash prose like that, it's a wonder I don't have Harvard knocking on my door already. I bet I'd be an awesome professor, too, but then I'd need to buy a Volvo and a corduroy jacket with patches on the elbows and, oh, never mind.

I bet I'd be an awesome professor, too, but then I'd need to buy a Volvo and a corduroy jacket...

Anyway, this is the time of year when new graduates stress out over their jobs, and Heather's circuitous professional path proves that post-graduation career anxiety is probably misplaced. Don't worry which law firm you join, because in five years you're going to be running a charter boat out of Panama, just until the heat dies down.

To cite just one example of how much your job can change, I have a friend who started out working at a consulting firm and now owns a fast-growing hair-extension company. By which I mean, the company is fast-growing. Not the hair. That stops growing when they cut it off the yaks. My point is, "Yak-Hair Tycoon" wasn't a choice at any of the job fairs.

As for Heather, she decided to go for her nurse practitioner degree, which requires two more years of school. That means a lot of long hours, a lot of selfless dedication and personal sacrifice. And I imagine it'll be challenging for Heather, too. ◆

Soroff On / Briga Heelan

FROM THE GROUND UP

THE UP-AND-COMING ACTRESS DISHES ON THE RED CARPET, RESUME FIBS AND HER MOST AWKWARD AUDITION.

MASSACHUSETTS NATIVE BRIGA HEELAN ATTENDED Natick's Walnut Hill School for the Arts and studied for a year at the Cincinnati Conservatory of Music before transferring to the University of Southern California. The daughter of an actress and a playwright, she originally planned to break into musical theater, but her talent for improv and comedic acting quickly landed her roles on TV shows such as Man Up, Jane by Design and Cougar Town. Currently, she can be seen on the NBC series Undateable, and she stars opposite Skylar Astin (Pitch Perfect) on the new comedy Ground Floor, where she plays a maintenance manager involved in an upstairs/downstairs romance with a money manager who works in the building. She lives in Los Angeles.

JONATHAN SOROFF: Let's discuss your name. It's pretty unusual.
BRIGA HEELAN: It's an Irish name. In fact, my last name was O'Heelahan back in the day. And Briga, I read somewhere, is some pagan Celtic goddess, which sounds great, so I really like saying that. But I was named after my grandmother's best friend, who lives in Dublin.

I imagine people mispronounce it all the time.
They do. It's "Bree-ga," not "Brig-uh," which is the most hideous-sounding thing. When mispronounced, my name goes from being quite pleasant to being just the ugliest thing you can imagine. It sounds like a medical term when you say it wrong.

With respect to your role on Ground Floor, are you actually handy and able to fix things? No, I'm terrible at that stuff. Really bad. But I've always been lucky to have a roommate who's good at that stuff. I do a lot of pointing, watching and sly commentary, but I can't actually do much at all.

What's the hardest thing about doing a sitcom? With a multi-cam sitcom, I had to develop a new skill set. I had done a lot of improv and a lot of theater, but this is a whole different thing. How quickly they change the writing, jokes and plotlines is really amazing. This is about absorbing it and letting it go as fast as possible, because the next day or even the next hour there's going to be an entirely new scene or script.

Worst audition horror story? I spilled a water bottle right in my lap while wearing this very tight dress, and it was just before I was about to walk into the audition for the sexy role. It looked like I had wet myself, and there was absolutely nothing I could do about it. Needless to say, I didn't get the part.

Is there a role you were born to play? No. Isn't the point of being an actor playing roles I don't think I can play? I kind of feel like it's more important that people be surprised that I can play a role than say, "Oh, yeah. Makes sense."

Biggest lie on your resume? What kind of dance I can do. I just listed all the classes I took. That doesn't mean I can actually do them. It just means I was present while someone was trying to teach them to me. I was breathing during intermediate jazz.

What made you switch from musical theater to comedy? I don't feel like I gave it up. I was in New York, trying to do it, and I had this strong gut instinct about it. I kept thinking, "This is not how I'm going to get cast." I wasn't enough of a triple threat to be in the ensemble of a musical. So I thought TV was a better fit for me, while I keep training and do the work. Hopefully, I'll get back to it. I still take voice lessons and all of that in the hope that I will. In the meantime, live comedy is the best job. It's the most fun in the world.

Actor or celebrity people most often confuse you with? I don't get recognized that way, but what does happen is that I find out that the person at the dry cleaner or the nail salon actually watches the show and has no idea that it's me. [Laughs] I'm like, "Jesus, I know I'm not wearing any makeup right now, but goddamn it!"

TV obsession? Oh, this show Naked and Afraid that's on Discovery. They drop a man and a woman, complete strangers, completely buck naked into a really harsh environment, like the jungle or the desert or a swamp, and they have to survive for 21 days. There's a really small camera crew, and they only intervene if these people are about to die. It's insane. The most amazing thing.

"The first time I saw myself on TV, about three years ago...I literally broke out in hives."

What's it like to watch yourself on TV? True story: The first time I saw myself on TV, about three years ago, I was at my aunt's house, and I literally broke out in hives all over my body. It was absolutely horrifying. I just freaked out internally, and I remember being really quiet on the drive home. I just wasn't used to it, because I was used to just doing the work and not seeing it from doing theater and improv. After that, I refused to watch anything I was on for about a year, and then I realized, "OK, this is your job. You need to know what you're doing." Now it's fine.

Any red carpet tricks? Zero. I haven't been on many, and it was like I blacked out and then woke up afterward. But it's so unbelievably unnatural, with people yelling things at you and big cameras that are really close to your face, so I think the trick is to somehow see the fun in it and try to look genuinely like you're enjoying yourself.

Person you most want to work with? Pretty much everyone. But I grew up loving Friends, so those three women are goddesses to me, and the fact that I've already gotten to meet and work with one of them is pretty awesome. Working with Courteney [Cox] on Cougar Town was pretty far up there, and I'd love to work with the other two, obviously.

The annoying job interview question: Where do you see yourself in three years? I'd love to be married, almost ready to have a kid, having either done or preparing to do a part that really scares me on Broadway. I'd also like to be working on the more creative end in TV and, of course, taking Ground Floor as far as it can go. That's a lot in three years, though. ◆

of Beetlebung

A year-round Vineyard resident, Molinari is the co-owner (with her husband, John) of Beetlebung, a coffee shop and retail store with two locations that, this month, will expand to include a third, slightly more "adult" establishment in Oak Bluffs. The new Beetlebung will be a coffeehouse by day and a speakeasy of sorts by night, when they'll open a "secret" side door and serve cocktails and gourmet small plates. We tapped Molinari for some other Vineyard secrets.

Favorite local shop? The Copperworks in Menemsha, where Scott, a local artisan and fisherman, hammers out original copper bluefish, stripers, whales and mermaids.

Where to take cranky kids? At Flying Horses in Oak Bluffs they can ride it out on the Mary Poppins-style merry-go-round. Plus, the loud music will cancel out any whining.

Scenic biking route? The many-miles-long biking path along Sengekontacket Pond. For the best scenic driving route: Middle Road, leading to Chilmark, where sheep farms, ancient stone walls and the wild Atlantic meet up.

Where to watch the sunset? Menemsha, a quaint fishing village with a western-facing beach along the Atlantic—by far the best sunset show on the Vineyard.

Touristy spot that's worth seeing? Gay Head cliffs, for the long, seemingly never-ending beach lined by skyscraper-height red cliffs. Tip: Avoid the western end if you're with children or if naked sunbathers—mostly middle-aged men—are not your thing.

Place to soak up the local flavor? A rickety old bench called "Squid Row" at the Menemsha Texaco station, overlooking docked fishing trawlers and the fuel pump for boats.

Quick! I'm only in town for a few hours: Where do I go? Circuit Avenue in Oak Bluffs.

What you love most about living here? I love what is not here. No McDonald's. No Starbucks. No malls. No billboards. And I love what is here: simple beauty, lots of texture, an endearing quirkiness and people from all backgrounds.

MELISSA MURPHY

of the Dreamland Film and Performing Arts Center

A graduate of Nantucket High School, Murphy grew up on the island and returned in 2008 after a few years ashore. Now she's the executive director of the Dreamland, which features comedy shows, live music, educational programs and movie screenings, including the Nantucket Film Festival (June 25-30), an annual event that draws stars such as Sarah Silverman, Brian Williams and Bill Hader.

Where to go for a big night out? To the Dreamland, of course! All joking aside, my husband Devon and I love a great dinner out—Oran Mor, American Seasons, the Pearl. We are so lucky to have such extraordinary culinary talent on Nantucket, along with great entertainment.

Best ice cream? The Juice Bar is a favorite, but the Nantucket Pharmacy on Main Street is a great runner-up.

Favorite dinner spot before a movie? Dinner at the bar at Town—their Brussels sprouts are amazing!

Favorite local performer? I love the wildly fun music of Coq au Vin or their close relative, Half Coq'd. I also love the bluegrass music of Chuck Colley and Erik Wendelken.

Must-see local theater company? I love the work of Theatre Workshop, which is the island's oldest theater company, blending the talents of our community artists with talent from afar.

Local filmmaker to watch? John Shea and his film The Grey Lady. It's been a long time since Nantucket was on the silver screen, and I know that John and his partner Army Bernstein will do the island's magic justice.

Favorite local shop? Tracy Berry and her products at Hepburn—they are so beautiful and so stylish. Plus, a welcoming staff makes it fun to try clothes on.

Best sunset views? Madaket is where everyone goes, but my favorite is to watch at Cisco Beach.

What you love most about living here? I love this community—hands down the best people to live 30 miles out to sea with.

TRACY WILDE LONG

of Cisco Brewers

Long knows where to have a good time on Nantucket—and where to grab a good beer. The daughter of Cisco Brewers' co-founders, she's now the general manager of the island's only brewery, which operates a year-round brewpub and shares space with sister companies Triple Eight Distillery and Nantucket Vineyard.

Where to go for a big night out? When I'm heading downtown after work, I start and end at Straight Wharf, with a couple other spots in between. It's right on the wharf, you can sit inside or outside, the staff is amazing, dance parties break out all the time, people from the dining room start partying in the bar, and sometimes the bargoers spill over into the dining room. Plus, the food is the best on the island—win, win.

Touristy spot that's worth seeing? Both the Whaling Museum and the Lifesaving Museum are perfectly curated and offer insightful perspectives on Nantucket history. The island is very unique; she has seen a lot of things. It's important to keep the collective history in mind.

Scenic bike path? I used to ride the Polpis Bike Path to work every morning, and I would see something different every single day. Animals, changes in the sky—you get a good feel for the different weather patterns on the island and the different scenery it has to offer.

Place to avoid tourists? If you are looking to avoid tourists...don't come to Nantucket! Just go somewhere else. What makes it so fun is that you can sit down in any bar, or go anywhere every day of the week, and meet new people from all over the world.

Best part about living in Nantucket? Swimming every single day is the best part about living here, because it's good for everything from clearing your head to curing a hangover, and the water is crisp and refreshing. I make a pact with myself to go to the beach every single day so I don't get too wrapped up and lose track of the important things.

JOSEPH GUGLIELMO

of the Cape Playhouse

Growing up, Guglielmo spent summers on Cape Cod, where visits to the Cape Playhouse in Dennis fostered a love of theater that led to jobs at Broadway in Boston, ArtsEmerson and the Provincetown Theatre Foundation. Now, the Yarmouth resident is back as the new general manager of the storied stage, graced by legends like Bette Davis and Humphrey Bogart and drawing several Broadway vets for its 88th summer season.

Favorite greasy spoon? The Pancake Man in South Yarmouth, for its quintessential Cape Cod kitsch.

Best ice cream? Sundae School in Dennisport. It's the original location, and nothing says Cape Cod like listening to a piano player while waiting in line for a sundae.

Date night spot? Wellfleet's PB Boulangerie Bistro. It's a little piece of France on the Cape.

Can't-miss event of the upcoming season? Christiane Noll in 1776 at the Cape Playhouse.

Arts happening? Provincetown gallery openings on Friday nights.

Favorite local shop? Parnassus Book Service in Yarmouth Port. You never know what you are going to find in a stack.

Where to take cranky kids? The Heritage Museums & Gardens in Sandwich. They have a children's area called "Hidden Hollow."

Rainy-day activity? Visit the Cape Cod Museum of Art in Dennis.

Best sunset views? The top of Scargo Tower in Dennis, on one of the tallest hills on the Cape.

Touristy spot that's worth seeing? The Cape Cod Maritime Museum. It really gives you the sense of what life was like on Cape Cod years ago.

Where to go to avoid tourists? Truro Vineyards. It's a great small vineyard with wine tastings. The word hasn't gotten out quite yet.

Best insider tip? Drive on Route 6A rather than the Mid-Cape Highway. It's one of the most beautiful scenic routes, and you avoid a lot of traffic.

TRURO VINEYARDS MICHAEL KOHLER

of Sugar Surf Cape Cod

Born and raised in Eastham, Weeks founded her surf school in Wellfleet five years ago. "Sugar Surf was created to teach people the proper rules of surfing as well as to get more females involved in the sport," says Weeks, who offers one-on-one instruction, group lessons and a kids' summer camp, plus custom packages for beach parties.

Favorite greasy spoon? The Homeport Restaurant in Orleans. The food is a perfect hangover cure and always consistent. Chances are you'll see a few people that you saw the night before.

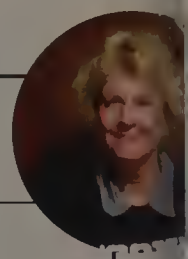
Best ice cream? If you're not going for soft serve (which you can find on every corner), I would suggest going to Mac's. They have every flavor you will want, and it's located right on the Wellfleet Pier, so you can watch the fishing boats come in while you catch the sunset! Or try the Red Barn in Eastham if the kids want to hit up the arcade and mini golf.

Best spots to surf? Orleans, Eastham, Wellfleet and Truro all tend to have the best sandbars. And if one is crowded, you can pick the next peak down. I always tell beginners to never surf with the crowd.

Bar for finding a summer fling? The Beachcomber in Wellfleet on Reggae Night.

Favorite local shop? Pump House in Orleans. It's one of the local surf shops, and they can take care of you for any surfing or ocean-related needs. They also have a super-cute collection of clothing, shoes, bikinis, etc. Good people!

Favorite surfer hangout? The Beachcomber of course, Land Ho!, Guapo's for Mexican and Margi's or Mac's Shack for bomb sushi and cocktails.



JUDY WALDEN SCARAFILE

of the Cape Cod Baseball League

Scarafile describes her love for Cape Cod with a familiar refrain: "You get that sand in your shoes once, and you always want to come back." The CCBL president moved full time to the Cape in 1975 and currently resides in Barnstable Village. She's helped spearhead one of Cape Cod's great summer traditions since 1991, earning a spot in a female pioneers exhibit at the National Baseball Hall of Fame.

Date night spot? Belfry Inn and Bistro in Sandwich. It's a former church, and when you walk inside you can sense that. They have seven guest rooms, each designed by a different artist.

Where to take cranky kids? The wave pool at the Cape Codder in Hyannis.

Rainy-day activity? The Cape Cod Baseball League Hall of Fame and the John F. Kennedy Hyannis Museum are under the same roof and have lots to see. Each one has an hourlong movie, too.

Best beach? LeCount Hollow in Wellfleet. My husband and I first discovered this in the 1970s. It had a steep sand dune that you could run over, and then you'd be right on the beach. Next stop, Portugal. Now, for environmental reasons, you can't run on the dune anymore, and there's not as much beach as there used to be because of the storms, but it's still great.

Best ballpark for catching a Cape game? Doran Park at Upper Cape Tech in Bourne. Students from the Tech school built the field and the concession stands, and it's a warm and friendly atmosphere, and a great place to watch a game. You can look over your shoulder and see the Bourne Bridge all lit up.

Favorite local shop? The Plum Porch in Marstons Mills. I actually detest shopping, but this place is great. You never see the same thing twice. They've got very unusual items to choose from for gifts, whether you need jewelry or a house-warming gift or something for the garden.

Scenic biking route? The Shining Sea in Falmouth takes you right to Captain Kidd Bar in Woods Hole.

LOIC ROSSIGNON & ROB ANDERSON

of the Canteen

Rossignon has called Provincetown home for more than a decade. An active member of the community, he's done everything from real estate to designing parade floats; now he's co-owner of the Canteen, a popular counter-service restaurant on bustling Commercial Street. Chef/co-owner Anderson, a former Boston Globe editorialist, visited Provincetown on vacation three years ago and, soon after, ditched journalism to pursue his passion for cooking. Both have insider knowledge to spare.

Where to go for a big night out? Loic: You can't beat the Mews Restaurant's famous hospitality and consistently excellent food. The Mews also has the largest vodka selection on the East Coast. It's no secret I've tasted...almost...all of them.

Date night spot? Rob: On our second date, Loic took me biking through the Province Lands bike trails. About halfway through, we stopped at Race Point beach for a picnic from Connie's Bakery and a dip in the ocean. That was four years ago, and we're still together, so it seemed to work.

Bar for finding a summer fling? Rob: The best place to meet someone in Provincetown isn't at a bar—it's outside of Spiritus Pizza after the bars close. Everyone's relaxed, happy and hungry. And maybe a little tipsy. Loic: Earlier in the evening, the Shipwreck Lounge is a great, more subdued place to meet people and actually hold a conversation. But if you're looking around last call, there's always the Atlantic House. Younger straight guys and girls should try their luck at the Underground.

Place to hear live music? Rob: Anywhere Billy Hough is playing, which is usually the Porchside Bar or the Grotta Bar. They call it "Scream Along with Billy" for a reason, though. Be ready to belt one out.

Rainy-day activity? Rob: The Waters Edge Cinema always has a great mix of mainstream and arty films. Plus, it's the only place in town where John Waters will threaten your life. (Go, and you'll see what I mean.)

Best sunset views? Rob: Before I moved to Provincetown, I would end every visit by watching the sunset at Herring Cove. On the more vibrant nights, it's like standing in the middle of a painting.

What you love most about living here? Rob: You can be whoever you want to be here. Of course, for gays and lesbians, that's a powerful thing, because even if you grew up in an accepting environment, it's still empowering to know everyone here just sees you as a guy or a girl, not that gay guy or girl. But it's not limited to sexual orientation. When you wash ashore here in Provincetown, you get to leave anything you want behind you.

NICOLE GELINAS

of Truro Vineyards and South Hollow Spirits

A year-round Truro resident, Gelinas is the events and brand manager for Truro Vineyards and South Hollow Spirits, whose new Twenty Boat spiced rum hits shelves and bars this month. The two family-owned businesses operate on a Cape estate that dates back nearly two centuries, and while Gelinas hasn't called Truro home quite as long as that, she's had time to become an expert on more than just wine.

Best cup of coffee? The Flying Fish Cafe on Briar Lane in Wellfleet. This little cafe, just off Main Street, is a great place where you can always run into friends in the summer. They serve locally roasted Beanstock Coffee Roasters coffee, and there's a lovely deck to enjoy on nice days. They also serve the best pancakes I have ever tasted, hands down, no contest—get the blueberry.

Favorite local shop? Chequessett Chocolate, in North Truro, just opened this year and is a fair-trade bean-to-bar chocolate shop. Think 70 percent cacao rich dark chocolate, healthy shakes with organic cacao powder and delicious chocolate bon bons and desserts.

Where to go for a big night out? Blackfish restaurant sits in the little hamlet of Truro and is an amazing find, serving amazing dishes with local ingredients. Try the buttermilk fried oysters and the tuna Bolognese. Then, after dinner, you'll be in time for a show at the Beachcomber.

Cheap night out? Provincetown is a great place to spend some money, but it is also possible to do some things on the cheap. All summer long, they open the art galleries for the gallery stroll on Friday nights. All the galleries are open, sometimes the artists are there and every place serves some type of snack and maybe some wine!

Best advice for blending in with the locals? Relax and slow the pace down. This isn't the city, and that's why you love it.

What you love most about living here? That I get to live less than a half mile from the beach, and my job is on a working farm. And the light—the light is beautiful.

WINDING ROAD

In a quiet corner of Martha's Vineyard, a husband-and-wife team has built a destination restaurant. Here's how they got there.

A WALK DOWN MEMORY LANE: (From top) Citrus, 1985; Slice of Life, 2003; The Sweet Life Cafe, 1997; The Sweet Life Cafe, 2001

WITH SPRING STARTING TO settle in, things are relatively quiet at State Road, a 60-seat restaurant tucked among the farms and forests of rural West Tisbury. But Mary Kenworth already has diners calling for August reservations. She and her husband, Jackson, have run State Road since its 2009 opening—she overseeing the front of the house with her charm and knack for remembering every face and name, and he, shier but with a twinkly smile, leading the kitchen.

When they moved to Martha's Vineyard 21 years ago, they didn't know what they were getting themselves into. But they did have a dream of what they wanted to create: Their own restaurant, a place with gardens, easy access to local ingredients and a welcoming feel that would keep regulars coming back year after year.

"I thought we were headed to Napa," Mary says with a laugh. But sometimes life takes you on unexpected turns. And sometimes it takes you right back to where you started.

On a recent Sunday, after the last brunch customer was out the door, Mary and Jackson traded stories about what it takes to run a restaurant on the island year-round, revealed favorite dishes and reminisced about the devoted regulars and famous names they've served (the Obamas and a Stanley Cup-toting Cam Neely included). Though there have been ups and downs during the past two decades, there's one thing they both agree upon: "It's a dream," Jackson says.

MARY WAS AN EAST COAST GIRL who first fell in love with the Vineyard as a college student, spending summers on the island while working practically every job there is in a restaurant—prep cook, waitress, front of house, you name it. But, never a fan of the cold, she moved to California after college, chasing the sunshine to Los Angeles. During a vacation, she ventured south to La Jolla and wound up at a staff party at the hotel, where she started chatting with the tall, smiling sous-chef: Jackson.

Years later, the couple, now married, was restless. Mary was working in the arts, but longed to be back in the food industry. Jackson, who'd spent time in the kitchens of such well-known restaurants as Spago and Citrus, was the executive chef at a Laguna Beach hotel, but spent more time behind a desk than behind a stove. The two daydreamed of opening a restaurant of their own and started talking about moving. Mary suggested Napa. Jackson wanted to try the East Coast. Perhaps joking, Mary said, "I'll go back to the East Coast only if we move to Martha's Vineyard." Jackson said OK. "I never thought he'd go for it," she says with a smile.

They moved in 1993, the year Bill Clinton first visited the island as president. Jackson took a job at the now-closed high-end restaurant Savoir Faire in Edgartown. "I really wanted to get to know the Vineyard, how things happened here," he says. "Where do chefs get their food? How do they get their food? I got a quick lesson really fast."

In the months that followed, he began to understand what it would take to run a restaurant not only on an island, but one with an economy that depends on the seasonal influx of customers, a place where the year-round population of 16,535 can swell to more than 100,000 in the summer months. He saw firsthand how quickly the restaurants filled up after Memorial Day—kitchens humming and waitstaff sometimes more than doubling—and slowed down after Labor Day, coming to a near halt after Columbus Day. He learned which fishermen delivered the best fish and came to rely on the island growers who simply showed up, unannounced, at restaurant backdoors selling greens, edible flowers or whatever else might be in season.

When Mary and Jackson were ready to look for a space of their own, they fell for the first one they saw. Nestled just off the road in West Tisbury, it had everything they'd imagined: gardens out back, lambs grazing a few fields away and a big porch where diners could linger over meals. The owners, however, were only interested in selling. At the time, Mary and Jackson could only afford to lease. So they looked elsewhere, eventually renting a romantic spot off the busy main drag in the town of Oak Bluffs, a tourist hotspot in summer. They called it the Sweet Life Cafe.

They opened in 1996, a time when fine dining in the U.S. meant exotic ingredients shipped from far away. But the island community was into local food long before it was trendy—living on an island requires a certain degree of self-sustainability. So Jackson put local sea bass on the menu and ordered bright red and yellow tomatoes from nearby farms. "It was just a no-brainer," Jackson says of his approach in the days before "farm-to-table" was such a buzzword. "The bottom line is that it was a better product. And it was supporting my community—the local fishermen and farmers."

Then, in 2003, the couple opened a second, more casual restaurant right across the street. Slice of Life was open for breakfast, lunch, dinner and dessert (the chocolate fondants were so popular that customers would start complaining if they didn't see them in the bakery case). They ran both for awhile, but still could not shake the dream of one day opening that restaurant with a garden, somewhere even closer to the sources of the food they featured and away from the hustle and bustle of Oak Bluffs' Circuit Avenue.

In 2007, fate intervened. On Thanksgiving weekend, a fire broke out in the restaurant space that Mary and Jackson had fallen for more than a decade before. The fire destroyed the building, and the tenants wanted to start fresh and reopen their restaurant elsewhere. With help from investors, Mary and Jackson made an offer.

Over the course of nine months, the couple rebuilt from the ground up, working with a team of local engineers and builders and designer Michael Smith (who received a call from new first lady Michelle Obama halfway through the project—she wanted his help decorating the White House's residential wing). They brought in centuries-old wooden beams from the old Necco candy factory in Cambridge, installed bathroom sinks made from refurbished copper, put a wood-burning grill in the kitchen and finally designed those gardens, seeding them with herbs they would soon feature on the menu. Less than a year later, they opened for business as State Road.

"WE LOVE THE PURVEYORS AND THE PEOPLE WE'RE WORKING WITH, AND WE WANT TO SHOWCASE THEIR WORK AS BEST WE CAN."

"It's a dream," Jackson says again. "We're in the middle of the agricultural hub of the island. We're 20 minutes from the docks of Menemsha. In the fields next door, there's a gentleman raising pigs, then up the road they're raising lamb." He uses the produce, meat and fish from more than 30 island growers, farmers and fishermen. This time of year, you can find local spring greens on the menu—see the recipe at right—as well as fresh farm eggs, chicken from up the road and fish caught that day. "We are guided by what we can get," says Jackson, who describes the cuisine as local, New American, with a twist. "We love the purveyors and the people we're working with, and we want to showcase their work as best as we can."

The restaurant serves breakfast, lunch, dinner and Sunday brunch and is open year-round, save for a five-week stretch in late winter for cleaning, repairs and a much-needed break. In the cooler months, it's open only Thursdays through Sundays. Business slowly starts to pick up in early spring, and they're savoring the pace. "People are tired of winter and they're starting to get out," Mary says. "Every night you'll watch people seeing friends they haven't seen since last summer. A table of two will turn into a table of four or six in a matter of minutes. It's great."

Soon the crowds will come and the 100-hour workweeks will begin. One year they counted the calls for reservations: On a summer day, more than 400 came into the restaurant's two phone lines during the course of 12 hours.

"I like the differences in the seasons," Mary says. "There's a certain marathon mentality to it that's fun and a challenge. I know that there is that day in June where there's no looking back."

What if the couple were to have a rare night off and enjoy the restaurant as diners? "I'd sit at position two at table 58," Mary says without hesitation. "You've got a bird's-eye view of everything that's going on, but you're in the corner, so you get the best of both worlds. Either that, or position one at table 21."

"I was going to say that," Jackson laughs. "Table 21, position one."

"You can see people coming and going, see the gardens, see the people sitting at the bar," Mary continues. "Or maybe someday we'll be grownups, come in during the winter and sit by the fireplace."

"My ideal meal would be made up of a lot of small plates," Jackson says. "I'd go with the charcuterie and this wood-grilled skate wing that we're serving as an appetizer right now. Or the lobster with pappardelle. Then I'd probably have the rabbit Bolognese."

Such dishes have drawn some high-profile diners: The Obamas have visited during three Vineyard vacations ("a huge privilege," Jackson says), and the cast of Saturday Night Live has closed the place down. A few years ago, Boston Bruins president Cam Neely brought in the championship trophy on a whim one summer evening shortly after the team won the Stanley Cup. "He ran it around the restaurant, and all of the staff and customers got to touch it," Mary says. "I saw two grown men cry! They told me it made their life."

Even during the busiest of busy times—July Fourth and pretty much all of August—and the times when island life makes it difficult to run a restaurant, neither would trade this sweet life for any other.

"It happens every day, sometimes 50 times a day, where I'm reminded that I'm just so happy to work here and live here," Mary says. "The other day, [local farmer] Rebecca Miller came in with her daughter and said, 'This is the only place she wants to eat lunch,' and I just think, 'Gosh, Jackson's been buying their vegetables since Sweet Life.' Or I'm driving home and I see a deer crossing the road, or pass by the water, and I just feel so lucky."

"And it's the people," Jackson adds. "The staff we have, the customers we have."

"There's a lot of love," Mary says. "The people we work with day in and day out—they make it all worthwhile." ◆

AGENDA for 5/14–5/27

May the Fourth be with you

An artful farewell.

IT'S NO WONDER PEOPLE WERE pretty bummed to hear that the Fourth Wall Project would be closing its doors this spring. Over the past five years, the independent Fenway art space has hosted consistently unique performance art, live music and exhibits—most recently local artist Kenji Nakayama's much-hyped first solo show. We're hoping the Fourth Wall will soon find a new home, but in the meantime we recommend stopping by the space this month to check out its last big hurrah. Trifecta: Year One is a four-day event produced by local print collective Trifecta Editions. Featuring an exhibit of works by a host of diverse local artists, it also boasts a stacked schedule of skill shares, live drawing and painting, artist talks, a roundtable with letterpress and screen printers, live music by local bands and, likely, a lot of reminiscing about good times. | Alexandra Cavallo

TRIFECTA: YEAR ONE runs May 22-25 at the Fourth Wall Project, 132 Brookline Ave., Boston, fourthwallproject.com, free.

GROWING PAINS

Hanging with Buzz Lightyear isn't the only experience Tom Hanks has playing with toys. Before voicing Woody in Toy Story, the actor grew up way too fast as 12-year-old Josh Baskin in the '80s comedy Big. After losing his crush to an older boy at a carnival, Josh finds a creepy fortune-telling machine and wishes for what every little boy thinks he wants—to be an adult. When he awakes the next day as a 30-year-old man, he moves to New York and gets a job at a toy company, where his childlike innocence is a major asset. Catch the movie and an MIT researcher's mini-lecture about the power of play on May 19 at the Coolidge Corner Theatre's Science on Screen series. / Ashley Rossi

Reviews by Brett Michel

Belle ★★★ Director Amma Asante's second feature is inspired by the story of Dido Elizabeth Belle (a luminous Gugu Mbatha-Raw), the mixed-race daughter of Capt. Sir John Lindsay (Matthew Goode in a cameo). Despite being illegitimate, she's raised in a loving household by her aristocratic great-uncle Lord Mansfield and his wife (Tom Wilkinson and Emily Watson, both in fine form), yet the darkness of her skin prevents her from fully participating in the traditions of her noble standing. While her white—and also illegitimate—cousin Elizabeth (Sarah Gadon) is readied for marriage, Belle is headed for a life as a wealthy spinster. But as formula dictates, she meets an attractive young idealist, John Davinier (newcomer Sam Reid, in an unfortunate wig), a lowly vicar's son. It's all captured in a candy-colored digital palette that's distressingly become the norm, flying in the face of filmed costume dramas of the past—but then, this is a story driven by change, with Davinier and Belle challenging her great-uncle to do right by his role as lord chief justice, helping bring an end to slavery in England. (At Coolidge Corner.)

Captain America: The Winter Soldier ★★★½ Literally defrosted after 70 years, Steve Rogers (Sudbury native Chris Evans), aka Captain America, is finding it difficult to reconcile his black-and-white worldviews with the shadowy grays of 2014. Having been given darker duds (and perhaps Batman's tailor) to suit the times, he reluctantly reports to Nick Fury (Samuel Jackson), his handler at S.H.I.E.L.D., the government spy agency that assembled superhero supergroup the Avengers. Thankfully, unlike recent Marvel Comics-derived movies headlined by teammates Iron Man and Thor, Cap's superb second solo outing is less an ad for next summer's Avengers: Age of Ultron than a throwback to the paranoid thrillers of the '70s. I'm looking at you, Three Days of the Condor. So, apparently, were directors Anthony and Joe Russo, who cast that film's hero, Robert Redford, in a pivotal role here. When an attempt is made on Fury's life, exposing a cancer that's destroying S.H.I.E.L.D. from within, Cap proudly dusts off his comfy old red, white and blue outfit; the overgrown boy scout turns fugitive, answering only to his sense of right and wrong as he sets things right. America, eff yeah. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

The Double ★★½ Director Richard Ayoade (Submarine, TV's The Mighty Boosh) opens his second film with a close-up on timid nobody Simon James (Jesse Eisenberg) as he rides a nearly empty subway car to work. Eyes closed, he doesn't notice when another passenger approaches; he's startled by the stranger standing over him, ominously proclaiming, "You're in my place." The atmosphere that Ayoade and cinematographer Erik Wilson immediately create gives the impression that you could be in for something special—until you get the sinking feeling that this adaptation of the Russian novella (scripted by Ayoade and Harmony Korine's brother Avi) is less Dostoyevsky and more Kafka—by way of Terry Gilliam's Brazil. Overlooked at work and ignored by Hannah (Mia Wasikowska), the girl of his dreams, Simon meets a new co-worker, James Simon (also Eisenberg), his mirror opposite. Picture Eisenberg's charismatic Mark Zuckerberg, but likeable, good with women and out to take Simon's place. The Double is such a slavish reproduction of Gilliam's dystopian classic that perhaps that's part of the point—originality be damned. (At Kendall Square.)

Finding Vivian Maier ★★★½ Vivian Maier loved collecting stories. The lifelong nanny hoarded newspapers, carting piles of them from home to home, family to family, with instructions that they never be touched. She was drawn to darker reporting, to tales of murder and secret lives. What her various employers and wards didn't know is that this eccentric woman had a secret life of her own. In death, she's attained a reputation as one of the most accomplished street photographers of the 20th century, having taken more than 100,000 photographs that went unseen—until amateur historian John Maloof purchased some contents of her storage locker by chance. Maloof and co-director Charlie Siskel's engrossing documentary chronicles his efforts to learn about the mysterious loner behind the photos. He follows a trail that leads him down a rabbit hole of conflicting accounts of the cagey recluse, as those who knew her realize on camera just how little they actually did know. It's a great story, one that Maier probably would have loved—if she weren't at the center of it. (At Kendall Square and Coolidge Corner.)

For No Good Reason ★★★ "I really thought what I would do, if I ever learned to draw properly, was I would try to change the world," Ralph Steadman says at the start of Charlie Paul's illuminating documentary about the 77-year-old British artist. We should consider ourselves damned lucky that Steadman never quite learned from others' traditional illustration techniques—otherwise we may have never been exposed to his crazed use of spattered ink, the rare technique he uses to start his drawings. And, in a way, he did change the world, as his longtime collaboration with Hunter S. Thompson gave life to gonzo journalism. What would Fear and Loathing in Las Vegas be without his demented drawings, he asks narrator Johnny Depp, a close friend of the late Thompson who memorably played the author in Terry Gilliam's unhinged adaptation of the gonzo classic (and not-so-memorably appeared as Thompson's surrogate in The Rum Diary). Depp interviews Steadman while bearing witness to some of that unorthodox creativity. Steadman's style, he reveals, was spawned from a 1970 trip to Manhattan's Skid Row. It shows, wonderfully. (At Kendall Square.)

Submit film listings by fax (617-859-1446), by mail to "Calendar: Movies" or by email to movies@improper.com. Include address, phone number, date, time, price, nearest T stop and a brief description. Deadline is four weeks prior to publication. Listings not accepted over phone.

Heaven Is for Real ★★ If you doubt that this painfully earnest new film from director Randall Wallace (writer of Braveheart) may be a crass cash-in on the ticket-buying power of Christians, consider that it's also a none-too-transparent pitch for Spider-Man, another property from Sony, the studio behind this film adaptation of pastor Todd Burpo's book of the same title. Colton (strong newcomer Connor Corum), the 4-year-old son of Todd and Sonja (Greg Kinnear and Kelly Reilly, both good), is surrounded by swag featuring Marvel's web-headed hero, from the posters hanging on his wall to a bedside Spider-Man lampshade. He carries his wall-crawling action figure everywhere, finally dropping Spidey when he loses consciousness as he's wheeled into life-threatening surgery. Even then, Sonja clings to the toy, while Todd gets angry at God. Colton survives, but he claims to have visited heaven. Could it be true? The declarative title leaves little room for debate, although the real shocker is not that Jesus looks exactly like Kenny Loggins, but that Colton's savior isn't Peter Parker. (At Boston Common and in the suburbs.)

Locke ★★★½ Put a man inside a box with nothing but a cell phone, and you might end up with Buried, 90 minutes of cheap emotional manipulation with Ryan Reynolds. Do the same with Tom Hardy, but behind the wheel of a BMW, and you witness what a remarkable actor is capable of when you can't take your eyes off him. It helps that Hardy has a crackling script by Steven Knight (writer of Dirty Pretty Things and Eastern Promises), who also directs. Although audiences are most familiar with Hardy as Bane in The Dark Knight Rises, the villain's respirator hampered one of Hardy's best tools: his voice. While you could hear muffled hints of Sean Connery in that performance, here you comprehend every dulcet tone of the Richard Burton-derived Welsh patois he utilizes as Ivan Locke, a dedicated worker and family man. After a fateful decision sets off a chain reaction, Locke's world unravels during the course of a claustrophobic nighttime drive, his job and home life hanging in the balance. Riveting. (At Kendall Square, Coolidge Corner and West Newton.)

Only Lovers Left Alive ★★★★ With all of the religious-themed movies that have been making the rounds in cinemas recently, you'll be forgiven if you think you're in for more of the same from a film featuring lovers named Adam and Eve. But you'll realize soon enough that these two are a bit out of place for a Biblical tale—they only spring to life under the glare of the moon. That's right, we're in for a vampire movie. But this is no Twilight. As played by Tom Hiddleston and Tilda Swinton, they're a different breed of bloodsucker than the tweens are used to. Like their director, Jim Jarmusch (MysteryTrain, Down by Law), Adam and Eve are creators, repudiating fame, preferring to disseminate their works quietly. They derisively refer to those who consume their art as "zombies." That is to say, us—the drones who pay 12 bucks to get our Friday night cinematic fix. It's A Portrait of Artists as the Undead, as imagined by Jarmusch, who clearly had fun creating another of his wonderful exercises in mood and style. (At Kendall Square, Coolidge Corner and Embassy.)

Palo Alto ★★★ What is it with the Coppola women and their attraction to the amoral ennui of overprivileged youth? Sofia examined the alarmingly nonchalant teenagers behind a string of Beverly Hills break-ins in last year's The Bling Ring, and now her 27-year-old niece (and granddaughter of Godfather filmmaker Francis) Gia Coppola makes an assured writing and directing debut adapting James Franco's underwhelming book of short fiction, Palo Alto: Stories. The third-generation filmmaker nevertheless finds some interesting—if not wholly original—hooks to hang her film on, from underaged drinking parties to high school slut-shaming. Emma Roberts (Julia's niece) plays shy, virginal April, and Jack Kilmer (Val's son) is Teddy, an introspective soul under the corrupting influence of his dangerously unpredictable pal, Fred (Nat Wolff). Teddy has eyes for April, but then, so does her soccer coach Mr. B., played by Franco—casting that should sound alternately brilliant and creepy to the actor's Twitter followers. While lacking her granddad's storytelling prowess, Coppola displays visual and aural flair, navigating around any charges of nepotism. Yes, even with the Roberts and Kilmer kids. (At Kendall Square).

Transcendence ★ In the new Captain America movie, there's a great scene where Cap encounters a long-dead enemy whose consciousness has been kept alive after it was uploaded into a supercomputer. The sequence is playful, smart, funny and ridiculous in equal measure. Transcendence, the lamentable directorial debut of Christopher Nolan's longtime cinematographer, Wally Pfister, is only ridiculous, taking two hours to convey what the superhero sequel effortlessly accomplishes in 10 minutes. Johnny Depp coasts as Dr. Will Caster, a rock star in the field of artificial intelligence and the target of anti-technology extremists who will do whatever it takes to stop him, even if that means shooting him with a radioactive bullet. (Only in bad science-fiction, folks!) Caster has weeks to live, so his wife (Rebecca Hall) toils tirelessly to transfer the genius' humorless mind into a computer network, terrifying consequences be damned! A modern-day variation on The Lawnmower Man, this is one of those films that fears technology without understanding it; it's as alarmist as 1995's The Net, and just as brainless. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs)

Under the Skin ★★★★ Director Jonathan Glazer (Sexy Beast, Birth) returns after a decade-long absence with a movie as strange and wonderful as anything Nicolas Roeg might have made in the '70s. There's more than a touch of The Man Who Fell to Earth, plus a lot of Performance, with Scarlett Johansson giving one of her most effective as a girl who fell to earth. Only her extraterrestrial's not a girl, exactly, even though a big selling point for this film is the promise of seeing Johansson fully nude. Despite this fact—and the four-star rating above—it must be stressed that this movie has as much mainstream appeal as Roeg's cited films. (And be honest: You've never heard of them, have you?) But for adventurous moviegoers, Glazer's freewheeling adaptation of Michael Faber's sci-fi novel, scored with otherworldly, buzzing strings by Mica Levi, offers the shock of discovery, and of the new. As Johansson's unnamed alien succubus drives the Scottish countryside in search of forsaken men, you may find yourself lured into this mysterious figure's van right alongside them. (At Kendall Square, Coolidge Corner and Somerville.)

MUSIC

Edited by Sarah Hagman

SOLID COMPOSITION Canadian singer/songwriter/composer/violinist Owen Pallett's music is as eclectic as his resume. Pallett spent his early years composing classical music, which later evolved into a distinctly contemporary sound, performed under the name Final Fantasy. But video game-themed string arrangements were far from a gimmick—his unique sound caught the ears of fellow Canadian indie giants Arcade Fire, with whom he frequently collaborates. (They landed an Oscar nom for their joint score for Spike Jonze's Her.) Catch him when he drops by Brighton Music Hall May 17 in support of his new art-pop album, In Conflict. Abagail Sullivan

GRAND GESTURES

With a career spanning more than 50 years, Jack Tworkov's longevity is almost as impressive as his large-scale paintings. The Polish-born artist, whose work appears in the Guggenheim and MoMA's permanent collections, used oil on grand canvases to create abstract shapes that have captured viewers' imaginations for decades. In Constellation of a Picture, an exhibit of his paintings from 1966 to 1967, some never publicly shown, ACME Fine Art highlights Tworkov's transition from abstract expressionism to the minimalist paintings of the '70s that he was best known for until his 1982 death at his home in Provincetown. See the big picture through June 21. Hannah Weintraub

David Stewart at Boston Rocks

Jacquinn Williams-Sinclair and Summer Williams at Movers & Shakers

TO THINE OWN MUSICAL TASTE BE TRUE

It was Elizabethan England meets CBGB at the Commonwealth Shakespeare Company's sixth annual gala, held at the Mandarin Oriental. The evening's theme— the streets of New York in 1985— was interpreted widely by guests wearing everything from Dynasty-sized shoulder pads to bondage pants emblazoned with the word "f---" (OK, so that was me). Present and accounted for: co-chairs Kelly Shacklett Boullet and Sam Mazzarelli, eccentric Southern belle Less Arnold, radio redhead Kennedy Elsey (rocking black leather and a Duran Duran pin), amateur basketball star Irwin Heller, the flawless Margaret McNeill, net-worth wizard Molly Hanson, brunette bombshells Adriana Hassan and Amber D'Amelio, party monster Bryan Rafanelli, banking hottie Rick Musiol, South End arts aficionados Kurt Gress and Samuel Parkinson, Baywatch babe Traci Bingham and her main squeeze, Devin Hill, and so on and so forth down the list of cool kids.

During dinner, hypnotically blue-eyed street artist Percy Fortini-Wright spray-painted a portrait of the Bard that was auctioned off at the end of the evening. An Andy Warhol look-alike worked the crowd while the music proved that the '80s produced an astonishing number of songs that even the rhythmically impaired can dance to.

After the party was temporarily interrupted by a fire alarm, the DJ immediately got things pumping again with the Talking Heads' "Burning Down the House," which prompted one guest to say, "I would've gone with 'The Roof Is on Fire,' but to each his own."

BEANTOWN'S GOT TALENT

You've gotta love any fundraiser where any outfit more formal than jeans would mean being seriously overdressed, and Boston Rocks—a benefit concert for Berklee College's community outreach programs—lives up to its name.

Held at Royale, the party featured the Berklee Full Circle Band, with amazingly talented lead vocalists Melanie Lynx, David Stewart, Samantha Schultz and Back Bay's answer to Bruce Springsteen, Steve Oristaglio, the event's founder.

The evening's high-powered crowd included the likes of Oristaglio's wife, Jeryl, financial titan Andy Goldfarb and his lovely wife, Stephanie Harvey, who mingled with his ex, Rachael, and her beau, Mark Slovenkai, soccer superstar Kelyn Rowe with the delectable Chelsea Stewart, lingerie model Leigh Weatherly Denny and her debonair husband, George, fashion icon Erin Gilligan and the dashing Hoil Kim, gorgeous legal badass Amy Dray McNamee, the impish Hamid Benbrahim and his babe-a-licious bride, Greta Meszoely, Back Bay hipsters Maura Connolly and John Egan, the statuesque Jennifer Donaldson, Bingo "The Prince of Bouclé" Sears and the ever-entertaining Charles Ribakoff.

The show ended with a rousing version of "All You Need Is Love," to which one guest mumbled, "I need vodka, too," and a thumping after-party took place at the W Boston, where there were tasty bites, free-flowing booze and a dance floor that got a good workout.

The evening's funniest remark: "I needed to get laid, so I stayed home by myself."

PRIME MOVERS

The Boston Center for the Arts' aptly named Movers & Shakers competition, held at the Cyclorama, attracted an attractive and opinionated crowd, who watched the city's top restaurants, bartenders, caterers and craft distillers compete ferociously in a battle to create the best cocktail. The event was sold out, with a line stretching down the block, and guests were given olive-shaped swizzle sticks to cast their ballots.

Prominent among the throng: mustachioed muchacho John O'Connor and the devastatingly handsome David Reichert, tall drink of water Bill Coombs, interior design avatar Suzanne Logan, the stunning duo of Summer Williams and Jacquinn Williams-Sinclair, exotic goddess Trearty Bartley, most of the Avruch clan (Frank, Betty, Steve and his hubby, Ed MacLean), the stunning Kristina Fernandez with fiance Ericc Lopez, and a guy in red-and-white striped shorts with a bowtie and a blue blazer, which prompted another guest to say, "Bold move, but I think he's rushing the season."

The award for Signature Cocktail went to the Beehive, and Hamersley's Bistro took Food and Drink Pairing. Overall Presentation went to Cinquecento, while the Crowd Favorite was Aquitaine. Meanwhile, the following gem was overheard: "How gay am I? I'm already planning my Halloween costume in April." ◆

SUMMER AS A VERB

AFTER OUR RUN-IN WITH THE WORST winter in recent memory—a beast that earned its own Wikipedia page—I was already pumped for summer. (I'm one of those weirdos who apparently thinks she can change the weather with her wardrobe choices, breaking out sandals and skirts as soon as the mercury hits the mid-50s.) But now, having assembled our Summer Preview issue, I'm even more motivated to get out and make the most of the season. That's the idea behind our primer on outdoor happenings, which rounds up 26 good reasons to soak up some sun. Meanwhile, Paul Robicheau offers his take on 10 hot-ticket summer concerts. And Lydia Santangelo delivers a dreamy and dramatic fashion spread with help from the cast of Cirque du Soleil's Amaluna, a twist on The Tempest set on a magical moonlit island and featuring a predominantly female cast, a first for the famed troupe. Playing from May 29 through July 6 on Boston's waterfront, the show also marks Cirque's first collaboration with Diane Paulus of our own American Repertory Theater (not to mention Time's recent list of the world's 100 most influential people).

Speaking of the A.R.T., that's one of several local theater companies where our talented cover subject cut her teeth. Jonathan Soroff interviews Uzo Aduba, a stage vet who's found a breakout role playing Suzanne "Crazy Eyes" Warren on Netflix hit Orange Is the New Black, bringing humor and heart to a character that could, in lesser hands, have become a cartoon. I know I'll be binge-watching when the second season premieres on June 6—one of the very few things that'll keep me indoors this summer. Hope yours is full of adventuring too.

BLANKET FOR TWO?

AT A GOURMET PICNIC, NO RESERVATIONS ARE REQUIRED »»

Bundle Up

The warmth of summer calls for alfresco dining, and a picnic requires no reservations. "Picnics are our jam," says Sofi Madison, owner of two-year-old artisanal shop Olives and Grace, which moved in early May to a bigger location on Tremont Street, with more room for its small-batch foods and gifts—and an entire corner dedicated to spicy treats. "I'd say the most essential part is your company, then the location, then the snacks you bring and, finally, the weather," Madison says. Here are her personal picks for a summer outing—just add a baguette and cheese. / Sarah Hagman

Summer equals exposed skin to adorn. "Why not take it back old school and rock a temporary tattoo?" From wristwatches to cupcakes, "they're all designed by artists in the U.S."

This handmade Ambatalia towel doubles as a basket. "You can wrap up your picnic, lay it out on the grass as a table setting, then tie it up to carry your utensils and jars with you home."

BESITO TO BOSTON, WITH LOVE

A GROUP OF MEXICAN EATERIES EXPANDS.

REAL DEAL: Besito features authentic Mexican recipes.

"I LOVE BURLINGTON. I LOVE BOSTON!" exclaims Besito owner John Tunney, who hopes the feeling will be mutual when he opens two new restaurants—one at the Burlington Mall (June) and one at the Chestnut Hill Mall (September). Tunney says his small Mexican restaurant group, with three existing locations in New York and Connecticut, is on the brink of national expansion, and he's already setting his sights on additional venues in Boston proper.

What can Bostonians expect from Besito? "A real, quality Mexican experience," says Tunney, who has traveled extensively in that country, often sourcing decor for his dining rooms. "Our recipes are very, very authentic, not fusion." To underline his commitment to the Boston area, he adds that his executive chef, Mexico City native Carlos Arellano, moved his family to the region several months ago.

In addition to cuisine such as tableside guacamole, tacos and enchiladas, Oaxacan fish dishes, and filet mignon served with nopales, Tunney takes pride in what he calls "lots of little service techniques to touch your life."

One of those little touches is a parting gift—a traditional Mexican worry doll—for each guest. "People love them," Tunney says, recounting the story of "a 30-something customer facing open-heart surgery. His last meal before pre-surgery fasting was at Besito. He taped the worry doll to the bottom of the OR table!"

GAME PLAN

BRASS UNION AIMS FOR AN ARRESTING ATMOSPHERE.

AS MORE RESTAURANTS AND BARS MAKE the welcome move toward crafting serious beverage programs, simply bellying up to the bar and ordering a drink can sometimes seem a bit overwhelming. But the current wave of new bars offering games (Blazing Paddles, Highball Lounge, State Park) aims to inject some fun into imbibing, and the forthcoming Brass Union in Somerville plans to fit right in among those spirited spots.

The bar's subterranean back room, which previously served as a spot for live music at the former Precinct Bar, will be home to a 14-foot shuffleboard table and a vintage tabletop arcade with games such as Pac-Man and Frogger. And a section of the upstairs patio will contain a cornhole game as well as a life-size Jenga set.

"There are some really nice places in town and in Cambridge that have games," says Brass Union general manager Scott MacDonald. "I always have fun. It keeps you in the restaurant for an extended amount of time."

Lined with couches for a lounge vibe, the back room will also have a DJ booth in one corner. Owner Ken Kelly (Foundry on Elm and more) plans to have DJs spin soul and funk on Thursdays, Fridays and Saturdays with no cover—but don't expect Brass Union to turn into a club by night.

"It'll be a fun, easy, laidback atmosphere," MacDonald says. "If it turns into a dance party at the end of the evening, so be it. But it'll be more of an organic thing."

The restaurant's front room was designed to resemble an 1800s-style tavern, with dark woods, black-and-white tile floors and antique mirrors. The gargoyles from the Capital Grille's former Newbury Street location will flank the bar, where the cocktail program will be led by Paulo Pereira. Executive chef Jonathan Kopacz (Chez Henri) will head up the kitchen, emphasizing American shareable plates. Items on the eclectic menu will range from cod cakes with citrus aioli, fennel pollen and blistered tomatoes to a chorizo hot dog with chimichurri sauce. Kopacz also plans on using herbs grown in the patio's massive planters. It's one of the ways MacDonald hopes the different areas of Brass Union—front tavern, outside patio and back lounge—will be able to connect.

"Precinct was a live music venue as well as a restaurant up front, so you really were struggling with bringing any type of synergy to the space. That's what we're trying to do, while trying a new concept out," MacDonald says. "We're trying to have fun with it."

SLATE ARRIVAL

Jenny Slate is the kind of actress/comedian you've seen in a million things (and heard, as in viral video "Marcel the Shell with Shoes On"), but whose name you can't quite recall. You likely won't have any trouble after catching her in her first big-screen leading role in Obvious Child, a razor-sharp "abortion comedy" about an unlikely romance between Donna, a struggling Brooklyn stand-up comic, and the one-night-stand who knocks her up. The movie hits screens on June 6, but first, we chatted with the Milton-raised Slate about unsexy details and what makes her laugh. / Alexandra Cavallo

EAST COAST GIRL: Slate, now living in LA, says she misses places like the Clam Box in Wollaston.

I FELT THAT THE ROMANCE IN THE MOVIE WAS IN THE REALISTIC, UNSEXY DETAILS. IT FELT VERY TRUE TO LIFE. Totally. One of my favorite parts is when Donna's mom asked her to go through the mail, and she's going through it, and he walks in. In any other rom-com she'd be like, "Oh my God!" and he'd do something cute or awkward. But instead, he walks in and Donna's like, "You're f---ing kidding me," and he's like, "F---!"

I GOOGLED "ABORTION COMEDY" EARLIER, TO SEE WHAT CAME UP, AND IT SEEMS SAFE TO SAY THIS MOVIE MIGHT BE THE FIRST OF ITS KIND... I think we don't see the movie as an abortion comedy; it's more that we think that life is funny. I think that abortion is serious and complex, and I sort of don't like that [this movie] is called that because I feel like it presumes that we are rough with the subject, or that we don't care about it or that we're not thoughtful about it. But, in fact, when you watch the movie, it's very thoughtful and funny and wild and playful.

IF YOU COULD TELL JOKES TO ANY PERSON IN HISTORY, WHO WOULD IT BE? I guess Gilda Radner? But also, like, George Washington.

I FEEL LIKE HE'D BE HARD TO MAKE LAUGH. HE'D HAVE A VERY STIFF UPPER LIP. Totally. And he had wooden teeth. I bet he had the worst breath ever.

WHAT'S SOMETHING THAT MADE YOU LAUGH REALLY HARD RECENTLY? What strikes me as funny are really simple things—like I saw one of my dogs punch the other dog in the face with his paw. It's always funny to me when somebody trips—and I hate it, because I don't like to laugh at people—but it just makes me laugh so hard.

SO IT'S SAFE TO SAY THAT YOU FIND PHYSICAL COMEDY PRETTY FUNNY? I do. I love it. I'm like a baby. I just laugh when the doorbell rings.

Summer is all about rest and recreation—especially when you can play a sport with an ice-cold beer in hand. Here's where to get your drink and your game on.

Bocce: An ancient game played by the Egyptians, Greeks and Romans, bocce falls just below soccer and golf when it comes to the world's most popular participatory sports. When ice cream entrepreneur Joey Crugnale opened the first Bertucci's in 1981, the Davis Square pizzeria had courts in the basement. This summer, the Greenway will host games on Thursday and Friday evenings, or you can try to catch one of chef Dante de Magistris' impromptu matches on the patio at Restaurant dante.

Cornhole: Folklore accounts differ as to when and where the bag-tossing game began. Some place it in 14th-century Germany, while others credit Native Americans and even Midwestern farmers. In lieu of crashing a nearby frat house to play, head to Battery Park's patio on Sundays.

Croquet: Today this sport is largely known as a game for seersucker-wearing WASPs. But not long after Louisa May Alcott mentioned the game in Little Women and Rutherford B. Hayes spent taxpayers' money on a set, the sport was banned in 1890s Boston because of the drinking, gambling and other debauchery believed to accompany it. During lunch or dinner at Area Four, ask a server about grabbing a mallet. / Sarah Hagman

ROAD RAGE AND RAVES

TO THE JERK ON HIS CELLPHONE WHO HONKED AT ME REPEATEDLY AS I BRISKLY CROSSED THE STREET AT WORCESTER AND TREMONT STREETS: I was on a crosswalk. And I was practically jogging across the street, despite a broken toe, because I know how motorists hate to wait for the three seconds it takes for someone to cross. Maybe if you hung up your phone, you'd notice street signs and crosswalk markings. Better yet, why don't you get your blobby body out of the car and walk? We would all be safer, and you'd be healthier.

–South End walker

TO THE PERSON WHO LEFT A BOUQUET OF YELLOW TULIPS ON MY WINDSHIELD IN WATERTOWN: You left a note saying we don't know each other, but that you wanted me to have a beautiful day, be kind, pay it forward and enjoy the little things in life. What a beautiful, fabulous gesture! They just happened to be my wife's favorite flowers! Whoever you are, thank you so much for such a touching and wonderful experience.

–Pleasantly stunned in Watertown

TO THE MOM CROSSING THE STREET WITH HER KIDS BY THE COMMON: Your behavior disgusts me. Not only do you have the audacity to both: A) ignore the Do Not Walk sign, and B) flip me off after I honk to admonish you for your poor choice (which could have cost you and your children your lives)—but you do both of these things in front of your kids. If you're leading by example, you've done a heinous job in demonstrating good manners to two impressionable boys. And you wonder why teachers spend so much of their time away from the curriculum and on social issues?

SPAIN'S REIGN

Albarino, verdejo, godello? Not exactly household words, but Northern Spain is home to a trio of indigenous white grape varieties that make light- to medium-bodied dry wines that are delicate and aromatic. If you appreciate understatement more than oak, here are some winners that will pair beautifully with seafood salads or mildly spicy Asian fare. / Sandy Block

LA CAÑA ALBARINO, RIAS BAIXAS, 2012
Located in cool coastal Galicia just north of the Portuguese border, Rias Baixas is home to Spain's prestige white grape, albarino. This one is florally scented, fresh and lively, with a touch of spritz and a delicious creamy texture.
$20, Bauer Wines, Boston

NISIA "OLD VINES" VERDEJO, RUEDA, 2012
Produced further inland, in warmer conditions, this juicy old-vine verdejo has a pear-like aroma, a soft texture, mellow fruit notes and touch of minerality. Spain's answer to pinot grigio? It's mild and subtle but with a persistent finish.
$17, Cambridge Wine & Spirits

AVANCIA "CUVEÉ DE O" GODELLO, VALDEORRAS, 2012
From the Valley of Gold, this godello is a bit more richly textured, concentrated and ripe, with layers of citrus and peach flavor. Bone dry and with a honeyed fruit note, this is made from one of the most venerable grape varieties in Spain, dating back to Roman times—but it was nearly extinct a generation ago until dedicated producers such as Avancia revived its fortunes.
$20, Bacco's Wine and Cheese, Boston

Soft-Shell Soft Spot

Ah, the time of year we've been waiting for—when Maryland blue crabs shed their winter coats and make their way onto restaurant menus all across town. Eastern Standard sous-chef Matt Garland's seasonal special displays a distinctly French flair that he picked up while staging in one of John Besh's New Orleans kitchens. The tempura-battered soft-shell is artfully perched atop a pillow of ultra-sweet Jonah crabmeat and sauce ravigote; Garland's take on the classic aioli-based concoction has fresh horseradish and Fresno chili that is just barely heated up. / Elizabeth Bomze

WORDS TO LIVE BY

A TALENTED YOUNG VOICE, SILENCED TOO SOON, ENDURES IN A POSTHUMOUS COLLECTION.

The Opposite of Loneliness* by Marina Keegan
Published by Scribner, 240 pages, $23

FIVE DAYS AFTER GRADUATING FROM YALE, Wayland native Marina Keegan died in a car crash. The first story in this collection of her essays and fiction features a character who likewise died suddenly and too soon. In "Cold Pastoral," narrator Claire obtains the diary of her late boyfriend from his ex Lauren, only to read of his ambivalent feelings toward her, and a love triangle now twisted by death. The story was posthumously published in The New Yorker, where Keegan had interned and was about to start a staff position.

Further reading reveals Keegan's versatility. In "The Emerald City," she takes on the voice of an American civilian contractor working in Iraq's Green Zone. Emails sent home to his girlfriend relate his accidental role in a mortar attack that kills dozens, including a friend. In her essay "Stability in Motion," we hear another of her voices, almost innocent, as she reflects on the wonders of youth's promise through memories of her first car. Inherited from her grandmother, the 1990 Camry she bedecked with a "Republicans for Voldemort" bumper sticker deftly conveys the ethos of her adolescence. Then it's on to "I Kill for Money," a funny and touching piece about an exterminator of bedbugs and rats; Keegan captures all his awkwardness, sincerity and crazy comic jokiness.

There are looks at college dating, youthful experimenting and sympathy for saddish empty-nest parents, but even in angst, Keegan's writing remains curious and almost cheerful. And throughout, there are reminders of the talent of this forever-22-year-old.

FROM PAGE 208: I read somewhere that radio waves just keep traveling outward, flying into the universe with eternal vibrations. Sometime before I die I think I'll find a microphone and climb to the top of a radio tower. I'll take a deep breath and close my eyes because it will start to rain right when I reach the top. Hello, I'll say to outer space, this is my card. ◆

Service is polished to a tee, but also personable. Staff members call guests by their first names, and they remember them.

At night, the garden paths are lit with hundreds of candles. This reduces electric glare, but try not to kick them.

Not enough can be said for the resort's guacamole. It should be eaten as often as possible.

PURE BLISS: With all your senses stimulated and desires met, you might never want to leave Maroma.

The Escape Artist / Andrew Rimas

PARADISE FOUND

THE BELMOND MAROMA RESORT & SPA IS THE JEWEL OF THE MAYAN RIVIERA.

EPIPHANIES ARRIVE IN MANY GUISES—Newton's apple, Archimedes' bath, St. Paul's donkey ride. But a particularly good epiphany happens on the coral sand at the Belmond Maroma Resort & Spa in Mexico's Mayan Riviera. Dozing on a beach chair a few steps away from the soft wash of the Caribbean, you open your eyes to see a smiling, white-clad spa attendant. She gives you a hand massage, just in case you weren't relaxed enough already.

That's when it hits you: You have got to order the ceviche again.

The Belmond Maroma is one of those corners of heaven that operate on at least four levels of bliss. Yes, it's an exquisitely groomed luxury resort on a stretch of idyllic coast. It's also home to one of the best spa experiences in the Western Hemisphere. The dining is flawless, from the eggs benedict with salsa verde delivered to your suite in the morning to the roast suckling pig carved up in the cantina. But, for all that, what you really remember is the service, which makes an impression from the moment of your arrival, when you're greeted with a house margarita.

But first, you have to get there. Maroma isn't easy to find. Unlike the mass of Riviera resorts off the Cancun-Tulum highway, it has no pharaonic entrance, no shimmering marble, no Vegas-scaled lettering. Unless your driver knows where it is, he might miss the subdued driveway, hardly big enough to pass two taxis abreast. Then it's a rumbling ride through jungle so dense that until a few decades ago, the coastline here was only accessible by boat. You arrive at a fantasy of dark wood, white plaster and thatch, designed with an eye for natural curves and winding garden paths. Butterflies flit through the foliage, and iguanas amble along the flagstones. As you step into a courtyard dabbed with Mayan statuary, the first thing you notice is a gigantic red parrot eyeing you from a perch among the flowers; the second is the mood of peace that enfolds you as you breathe the ocean air.

Inside, rooms are opulent but uncluttered. Suites have hardwood floors, mosquito netting and tiled bathtubs big enough for swimming laps. There are hammocks on the private porches and local herbs in the bath products. And there are no televisions. Maroma is deliberately relaxed, in contrast to the all-inclusive resorts that mushroom on every stretch of sand in this part of the world. The property has only recently welcomed families, and two of the three pools remain adults-only. A pingpong and games center operates near the bike shed, and the restaurants have children's menus with burgers and fries, but otherwise the facilities are weighted more toward the post-pubescent crowd. (If you really need it, there's a TV and video library in the 24-hour entertainment room.)

The spa, for instance, offers a shared treatment hut for couples, including a circular bath strewn with tropical flowers. Saunas are scented with local herbs, and services include a Janzu treatment involving guided movements in a warm meditation pool. Just opt for a deep-tissue treatment, though. It will likely be the most cathartic experience your torso has ever known.

A lot of guests visit with a mind for health, and the resort boasts a state-of-the-art fitness center and yoga pavilion. Even more interesting is the authentic temazcal sauna fired up on moonlit nights. An underground chamber at the edge of the beach is heated with volcanic rocks, and guests purge themselves in torrents of sweat. They can retoxify at the thatched-roof beachfront tequila bar, which also serves sashimi and the aforementioned ceviche.

For a sophisticated evening out, El Sol restaurant is candle-lit, elegant and tapas-oriented, with an emphasis on local fish, citrus and chilies. But the ambiance is subdued. More lively is La Cantina, a small dining room with bright Mexican decor and traditional cookery. Don't miss the tequila dinners. The main patio restaurant, though, is the best spot for midday guacamole and shrimp tacos overlooking the sugar-white beach.

This is, of course, the reason you booked your trip. Maroma's stretch of beach is blissfully uncrowded. Attendants rake the sand for anything that might stub or entangle. They even carry around buckets of iced fruit. A boat will take snorkelers and divers out to the coral reef just offshore, and there are opportunities for parasailing. But it's hardly necessary. Lying on one of the resort's blue recliners, letting your gaze drift out to sea while the sun and breeze brush your skin, is a revelation enough. ◆

PIZZA ON POINT

PASTORAL EXTENDS ITS 'HOOD'S FOOD-GEEK BONA FIDES.

PASTORAL
345 Congress St., Boston
(617-345-0005)
pastoralfortpoint.com

ONE OF THE WAYS YOU KNOW A neighborhood is blossoming as a dining destination is that it starts developing distinguishable subidentities. You can clearly see this in South Boston in the increasingly distinctive personalities of the Seaport and Fort Point. Along Seaport Boulevard and Northern Avenue, the Seaport mostly offers tourist- and conventioneer-friendly chain restaurants and bars. Meanwhile, a mere block over in Fort Point is a cluster of independent chef-owned places along or near Congress Street—like Row 34, Drink and Tavern Road—with much more interesting cuisine and beverage programs. Pastoral, the new casual-Italian restaurant from veteran chef and first-time owner Todd Winer, extends the block's tradition as the corner of the neighborhood where the food geeks want to hang.

Much pre-opening attention has been lavished on Pastoral's wood-fired pizza oven, a gleaming behemoth of fire-engine-red brick that dominates one end of the dining room and turns out Neapolitan-style pizzas. You don't need to be aware of Winer's certification by the Associazione Vera Pizza Napoletana for his use of stringently traditional ingredients and techniques to know that Pastoral's pies are terrific. Nicely charred by a brief rest in front of 900-degree flames, the crust is chewy at the perimeter and best enjoyed with relatively simple toppings like the classic Margherita ($14) with basil and hand-torn chunks of the house's fresh mozzarella (which appears on many plates here), or a superb loose fennel sausage ($16) on a blanket of fromage blanc.

Wood-fired knots ($7.50-$8.50 each), fist-sized turnovers of savory ingredients like good olives and anchovies, are prettily plated, but overstuffed enough to upset the balance of dough and extras achieved in the pizzas. A more successful non-pizza use of the wood oven is the artichoke alla guidina ($11), a variant of the classic fried artichoke of Roman Jewish cuisine, here a large specimen fire-roasted, flavored with orange and mint and stuffed with many butter-soft whole garlic cloves. The "roasted big beet" ($9) is another beneficiary of that oven, though its admixture of black Sambuca, feta and mint verges on weirdness, and its foil-wrapped presentation is quite homely. Appetizers include a plate of chicken meatballs ($9) with winningly crisp exteriors, resting in an eye-catching, zingy pool of red pepper conserva. Stuffed fried olives ($6) make for an irresistible bar snack: crunchy in their breadcrumb coating, steamy and briny within.

My expectations of the pastas at any joint that leads with pizza aren't high, but Pastoral exceeds them with several extraordinary house-made versions. "Plins" ($17), small ravioli with a mushroom/walnut filling, feature a glossy, sweet Amaretto-based sauce and tender escarole. Ricotta dumplings ($16), puffy little pillows that fall on the airy side of the dumpling spectrum, are pushed into richness with sauce of pistachios and mortadella butter. Radiatore pasta ($16), cunningly shaped to recall steam radiators, are mounded atop another stunning, intense sauce, a ravishing ragù of braised veal breast and Gorgonzola dolce. I thought about this dish for days afterward, and then I had Winer's mezz rigatoni ($16), with its absolutely dazzling Bolognese and dots of fresh fior di latte, maybe good enough to trump neighbor Barbara Lynch's famed version. I also greatly appreciate their availability as half-orders, making it easy to enjoy pasta in the sensible, modestly priced mid-course portions of Italy.

Among the large plates, the oxtail ($21) makes the biggest impression: It's huge, a cross-section of oxtail the size of a sapling stump, beautifully braised to allow lots of tender, fatty meat to be easily picked off the bone, coated with a relish-like onion reduction "gravy" and served with Toulouse sausage of garlicky pork over Puy lentils, like an Italian riff on cassoulet. Fabulous, but you'll probably need help to finish it.

Pastoral continues the best local restaurant trend of 2014 by debuting with a strong bar program, with delicious original shaker cocktails like the Paloma-esq ($12) of mezcal, quinine-flavored vermouth and grapefruit, and refreshing beer cocktails like the Southie ($10) of bourbon, Aperol and lager. The Italian-leaning wine list includes four drafts ($9-$11/glass, $22.50-$27.50/half-carafe) and another three dozen bottles ($32-$72, most in the forties), including four sparklers, a rosé and an orange wine; nearly half are poured by the glass ($8.50-$13). Twenty draft beers ($4.50-$12) and another 18 in cans and bottles ($3.50-$13.50) favor small American (especially New England) craft breweries but toss in enough macro adjunct lagers and strong-flavored Belgians to please most crowds.

Echoing the worst local restaurant trend of 2014, Pastoral challenges conversation with rather loud volume levels. Service has that good indie-restaurant vibe: Servers are menu-literate, enthusiastic about the food and drink, but fairly informal in aspect and tone, and early expediting problems that led to some less-than-piping-hot pizzas being served appear to be abating. In all, Pastoral nets out as another impressive addition to a neighborhood that I hope works harder at marketing itself as Not the Seaport. Suggested slogan: "They got the glitz and Harbor views; we've got the great food and drink." ◆

Q: I HAVE PUFFY SKIN AND BAGS UNDER MY EYES THAT MAKE ME LOOK MUCH OLDER THAN I AM.

A: This is a very common concern for men and women. Bags under the eyes are caused by fatty deposits and is a hereditary condition; you can not diet this fat away. These under eye bags can be removed through a cosmetic surgical procedure called blepharoplasty.

This one-hour procedure is performed under local anesthesia, there is minimal discomfort, and the recovery time is 7 to 10 days. During this time you will feel fine and can drive, shop, and maintain normal activities. However, you will initially want to wear dark glasses outside of the house because there will be some swelling and bruising around the eyes for a few days.

After the surgery, you will look natural and will look like yourself, but more alert and refreshed. I would invite you to come in to SkinHealth for a free consultation with Dr. Daniel Townsend, an ophthalmic plastic surgeon who has successfully performed over 12,000 of these procedures.

BIG GUY, BIT PART

THE GIANT LIZARD IS REDUCED TO A GUEST-STOMPING ROLE IN HIS OWN MOVIE.

GODZILLA ★★½
Starring Aaron Taylor-Johnson, Elizabeth Olsen, Ken Watanabe, Sally Hawkins, David Strathairn, CJ Adams, Carson Bolde, Juliette Binoche and Bryan Cranston. Screenplay by Max Borenstein, based on a story by David Callaham. Directed by Gareth Edwards. At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.

SIXTY YEARS AFTER ISHIRO HONDA unleashed the H-bomb-spawned "Gojira" on Japanese audiences still reeling from the horrors of Hiroshima, Godzilla breathes atomic fire once again in this crowd-pleasing reboot from director Gareth Edwards. But while the scaly sexagenarian glimpsed here is vastly superior to the wrong-headed monster seen in Roland Emmerich's disastrous 1998 reimagining starring Matthew Broderick, at least that version of the giant lizard wasn't reduced to playing a cameo role in his own film.

Nevertheless, Edwards' reverential rendition of the King of the Monsters—while much larger and created with expensive CGI—is much closer in design and temperament to Honda's, which in reality was nothing more than a man inside a sculpted rubber suit. Stomping on miniature reproductions of Tokyo across nearly three dozen films and series, the creature became a Saturday afternoon staple for American youths who sat glued to televisions, unresponsive to their mothers' repeated pleas to turn off the TV and go outside.

So it's a shame that this admirable interpretation does so much right while relegating everyone's favorite reptile mostly to the shadows.

In opening scenes, set in 1999, we're introduced to Dr. Ichiro Serizawa (Ken Watanabe) and his assistant, Vivienne Graham (Sally Hawkins), who arrive by helicopter at a dig site in the Philippines, where they soon discover some prehistoric bones. If this resembles the opening moments of Jurassic Park, it's wholly intentional; as the rest of the movie makes clear, Edwards is a Steven Spielberg fan.

Descending below ground, the scientists find themselves within the fossilized remains of a gigantic rib cage, which stretches as far as they can see.

A stunned Graham asks, "Is it him?"

"No," Serizawa replies. "This one is much older." While Godzilla isn't housed within this tomb, another recently hatched creature was—and it's headed toward Japan (of course), where it will cause the meltdown of both a nuclear facility and an American family, the Brodys (a familiar name for fans of Spielberg's Jaws).

Joe Brody (Bryan Cranston) is a supervisor at the plant, as is his wife, Sandra (Juliette Binoche), who perishes as he watches in horror. Their son Ford (CJ Adams) witnesses the catastrophe from his grade-school window, one of many over-the-shoulder shots that present a human-eye view of devastation, accompanied by numerous slow zooms toward actors' faces, their mouths agape—another signature Spielberg touch.

As we shift to the present day, a lead character emerges: a hardened Ford (now played by Aaron Taylor-Johnson), who lives in San Francisco with his wife, Elle (Elizabeth Olsen), and their 5-year-old son, Sam (Carson Bolde). But Ford must return to Tokyo, where an obsessed Joe has been arrested at his former job site, now a quarantine zone.

A Fukushima disaster allegory is squandered in this boilerplate screenplay, which trades in familiar tropes. Consider: Joe is the scientist who no one listens to until it's too late—for them and him.

Spoiler alert: Though the movie's advertising prominently features the Breaking Bad star, Joe doesn't survive long enough for Godzilla's reveal, which caused an eruption of applause at this critic's screening. And compared to Joe, Ford is even more thinly written; the understated Taylor-Johnson can't sustain the tone established in Cranston's scenes.

Instead, we're left to delight at fleeting appearances of the Big G as he brawls with two other giant monsters, and at more of those Spielberg moments: an overhead shot of Godzilla's dorsal fins dipping below the water as he swims beneath a boat offers another Jaws homage; a submarine in a jungle evokes a desert-marooned oil tanker in Close Encounters of the Third Kind; a defeated Ford drawing his pistol on an insurmountable enemy recalls Tom Hanks' final moments in Saving Private Ryan.

Edwards enjoys teasing an audience, keeping his creature under wraps, like Spielberg with his shark or his dinosaurs. But Godzilla doesn't appear until almost an hour into this movie, a test for viewers rather than a tease. However, Spielberg might crack a smile at this inspired bit: Ford's son sits in front of a TV telecasting images that look just like one of those man-in-suit monster battles that used to transfix kids to their sets—only it's a news report from Hawaii. "C'mon, Sam," says Elle, comically unfazed by the unreal broadcast. "Turn the TV off."

It's a smart, surreal touch in a movie that could have used more of them. ◆

MAGIC TIME

REVIVED '90S BAND REVISITS THE RUSH OF ITS YOUTH SPENT ON NEW YORK'S CLUB SCENE.

Luscious Jackson's back, echoing its groovy pastiche of rock, hip-hop and dance music that peaked in the mid-'90s with the Daniel Lanois-produced hit "Naked Eye." The all-female group, playfully named after a retired NBA player, dissolved in 2000 when singer/bassist Jill Cunniff became the first member to want to shelve her music career and have kids. Finally, a few years ago, the band went for the rebound.

"Now it's a fun thing for us, and that liberates us," Cunniff says from her Brooklyn home/studio, where the group recorded its November 2013 release, Magic Hour.

The era that Luscious Jackson really tapped to make the album wasn't the '90s though. It was the dawn of the '80s, when Cunniff and guitar/vocal foil Gabby Glaser romped through their early teens on the New York club scene.

"We experienced something at a time that you could call crazy or magical," says Cunniff, 47. "My kids are coming to that age, and there's nothing like that... It was almost like a mass-culture thing, where all the high school kids were out all night."

Her schools were more dangerous than the street, she adds. "That was the great irony, the sense of respect and freedom going on at night. We'd see hip-hop and punk and incredible generations of music, because all the old funk bands would come and play. The club scene was so varied. It had a huge range, and that's what influenced our music and put us in a specific place that doesn't have a genre."

That continues on Magic Hour, which flows with the same funky, frisky touch. Cunniff produced it all digitally on ProTools while drummer Kate Schellenbach added parts from Los Angeles, where she's a producer for daytime talk shows. Keyboardist Vivian Trimble, who left the group for other projects in 1998 and lives in New Hampshire, passed on the reformation.

"Whatever we brought in, we just built on it," Cunniff says of the writing and recording process. "It was literally piece by piece, from scratch. And that's how we used to do it, so that's why it sounds like us."

That sound still hinges on the seductive contrast between Cunniff's melodic vocal hooks and Glaser's dusky spoken-word style over a melange of alt-pop, hip-hop, funk and reggae. And lyrically, there's that nod to the longtime bond between Cunniff and Glaser, starting with lead track "You and Me," where they sing "We're better together." In "We Go Back," they also pay tribute to the late Adam Yauch of the Beastie Boys, singing, "We can't go back, but we can go on."

"We experienced something at a time that you could call crazy or magical."

The connection with the Beasties runs deep. Schellenbach played with that band during its early punk days, and Luscious Jackson signed to the Beasties' Grand Royal label. Adam Horovitz also contributed to Magic Hour's hypnotic, dub-based "So Rock On."

On the other hand, there's silliness like Glaser's "#1 Bum," a jam about admiring people's butts. "At first I thought it was ridiculous, and I realized it was hilarious," Cunniff says. "A lot of themes on the album are that we reconnected to this bold childhood, this crackle when you're teenagers and you're out there and adventuring."

Luscious Jackson financed the album through crowdfunding on online platform PledgeMusic. As an incentive package, Cunniff and Glaser even led tours of their old East Village haunts, and the band reached its goal in two days. PledgeMusic also helped build a mailing list. "I think it's our [old] crowd, now in their 30s," Cunniff says. "That was really rewarding, just to be in contact with everyone."

Seeing fans on tour has proven more difficult, given the band members' young children and bicoastal logistics with Schellenbach, who has worked on both Ellen DeGeneres' and Chelsea Handler's TV shows. The group's June 7 date at the Paradise Rock Club, with a six-piece touring lineup that includes old DJ friend AWD Young, is a one-off among limited weekend gigs.

Cunniff calls this an "experiment year" for Luscious Jackson, but she expresses hope for the future, when their kids won't need child care. "It gets a lot easier when they're teenagers," she says. That is, if they're not lost in the nightclubs. ◆

GROCERY GAMES

ONE MAN'S QUEST TO EAT BETTER AND SPEND LESS.

IT BEGAN AS A MISSION FOR BETTER LUNCHES. Sick of slamming together a turkey sandwich or glumly unwrapping a microwave burrito five days a week, I started going to the grocery store every couple of days. I'd buy salad mix, rotisserie chickens, bags of almonds. Besides making me realize the health benefits of avoiding ramen, my frequent grocery runs alerted me to the often appalling cost of food. Seven dollars for grapes? Eight bucks for a little block of cheddar? Why, I remember when such things were... well, I don't know, because I wasn't paying attention until about a month ago. But two bucks seems like a lot for a red pepper. I blame the Mexican cartels, as I do for many things.

Armed with my newfound awareness and indignation, I examined our previous two bank statements and found that we spend $1,500 a month on groceries. I don't know what a reasonable number is for four people, but $1,500 would seem to leave plenty of room for improvement. So I started bargain shopping. Our fridge was filled with cherry tomatoes, which always seem to be on sale. The Rachael Ray dog food got switched for whatever third-rate horse nuggets were on sale. There was a moment of marital discord when Heather wanted to make fish tacos and I came home with cod instead of tilapia. Hey, it was on special for less than the tilapia, and an upgrade to boot! Now let's enjoy these meaty cod tacos, just like the Pilgrims would have if they'd landed in Baja.

Given my mission to eat better while reducing our food bill, I was not immediately on board when Heather suggested augmenting our grocery-and-takeout regime with Blue Apron, a service that delivers you three meals a week. It's $240 a month for two people, but that outlay replaces at least some of the money that you would've spent on 12 dinners. Aside from the financial aspect, I was just sort of dubious that I'd want to eat anything that arrives in a cardboard box from FedEx.

When the first Blue Apron box arrived, I opened it to discover what amounted to a cover letter on top, explaining the choices for that week. "Some amateur scholars have called them the rhythm section of the sea," read the bio for blackened drum. "We call them delicious." I would've gone with, "We're bongos for this drum!" but I can't expect chefs to come up with professional-writer lines like that.

Along with the introduction were three recipes printed on thick, glossy paper and annotated with step-by-step photos. Below those was the food, all individually packaged and labeled so that it doesn't get lost in the jungle of your refrigerator. You can tell this service is aimed at single dudes, because the labels take nothing for granted—a carrot is sealed in a plastic bag labeled "carrot," looking like evidence in some kind of heinous root vegetable-based crime.

The recipes themselves tend toward the ambitious. Consider Merguez-style brochettes with cauliflower "couscous" and salsa verde, one of my favorites so far. (Blue Apron is big on "foods" impersonating "other foods," as in the shrimp quinoa "fried rice.") This is the kind of recipe I'd see on Epicurious and think, "Hey, I should make that!" before realizing that I'd need to spend five months backpacking across Morocco to collect the necessary ingredients. Besides calling for three tablespoons of Marcona almonds and two teaspoons of harissa, this recipe includes a tablespoon of a five-spice blend created by Larry Baldwin, executive chef of Cata in Manhattan. I've never even heard of Cata, but I'm still impressed. It's fun to belittle your friends by telling them that there's no point in sharing the recipe because it requires Chef Baldwin's spices from Cata and they'd probably just ruin it by using Mrs. Dash.

We're now three weeks into the Blue Apron deliveries, and most of the recipes have been great—the chicken and mixed mushroom forager had us both repeatedly proclaiming, "This tastes like something you'd get in a restaurant!" (As opposed to something you'd get dropped on your porch via express mail.) The pork buns, however, were like slabs of undercooked bacon on bad dinner rolls. Banh mi? No, banh you.

Occasional pork belly misfires notwithstanding, I think we're addicted to Blue Apron. It's like having an angry personal chef who plans dinner, gathers everything you need and then leaves. Fine, you know what, Raoul? We'll cook it ourselves! Who does Raoul think he is, anyway? Curse that brilliant bastard, because you know we'll let him do the same thing again tomorrow.

As for our grocery bill, I haven't yet calculated whether Blue Apron in fact inflates it. But if it does, I'm willing to cut back in other areas, such as grapes and cheddar and dinners out at Cata. Now pass the harissa. ◆

I was just sort of dubious that I'd want to eat anything that arrives in a cardboard box...

Think that's funny? Send unbiased emails to ezra@improper.com.

THE EYES HAVE IT

THE ACTRESS SOUNDS OFF ON COMEDY, HER CONVICT CHARACTER AND WHY SHE'D NEVER CHANGE HER NAME.

UZO ADUBA, WHO PLAYS SUZANNE "CRAZY EYES" Warren on the hit Netflix series Orange Is the New Black, was born in Boston and raised in Medfield. After graduating from Medfield High, she studied classical voice at Boston University. She immediately found work in theater, with roles at the Huntington Theatre Company and the American Repertory Theater, where she won an Elliot Norton Award for Outstanding Musical Performance. She was also nominated for a Helen Hayes Award for the Kennedy Center production of Translations of Xhosa. Her Broadway debut came in 2007, in Coram Boy, followed by the hit revival of Godspell in 2011. She made her television debut in 2012 on the CBS series Blue Bloods, and her film credits include the independent shorts Over There and Notes. She lives in New York.

Since starting the show, do you ever have dreams about being in prison? Not necessarily of being in prison, but I've had a dream of waking up to someone peeing in my room.

How do you become "Crazy Eyes"? Well, first let me say, I definitely need to shake her out after I'm done, because she stays with me, and I walk a lot afterward. I need to put her back on the shelf, and that's becoming easier. But when I first started, there was this one line that really helped me to capture her. It said, "She's innocent, like a child, except children aren't scary." And that made me think of an adult-sized kid with, like, a pacifier and a sledgehammer.

Do you think your eyes got you the part? No. I didn't even audition for it when I auditioned, which I guess is really the scary thing, because it makes me wonder what they saw in me. [Laughs]

What part of the character is you? I'm a lover. I don't go to the extremes she does, but I love love. I'm in love with love. I'm all in. That, I connect to.

Biggest difference between acting in the theater and acting on TV? No applause. [Laughs] It's not live, obviously, so that's huge. It's taken me time to learn to play into the space of the camera, but I think I'm getting it.

Do you get a lot of fan mail from inmates? No. I don't think a lot of inmates have Netflix. But that would be amazing.

Weirdest part of being an overnight sensation 11 years in the making? People knowing who you are, or thinking they know you, before you know them. People expect me to be Crazy Eyes on the subway, with the knotted hair and the jumpsuit, and they seem really surprised to find out what I really look like. You can see when people realize it's you. I was skiing a few months ago, and this girl recognized me and wanted to take a picture. She started talking about my work and my acting resume, and she knew all this stuff about me, and I didn't know anything about her. So that's sort of odd.

Are you surprised by the show's popularity? Yes, because there's no way to predict what's going to catch fire. I knew it was a great show all along, but no one can dream of something like this, and I'm just happy that people love it as much as we love making it.

"If they can learn to say Tchaikovsky and Michelangelo... they can learn to say Uzoamaka."

Did you ever consider changing your name? When I started as an actor? No, and I'll tell you why. I had already gone through that. My family is from Nigeria, and my full name is Uzoamaka, which means "The road is good." Quick lesson: My tribe is Igbo, and you name your kid something that tells your history and hopefully predicts your future. So anyway, in grade school, because my last name started with an A, I was the first in roll call, and nobody ever knew how to pronounce it. So I went home and asked my mother if I could be called Zoe. I remember she was cooking, and in her Nigerian accent she said, "Why?" I said, "Nobody can pronounce it." Without missing a beat, she said, "If they can learn to say Tchaikovsky and Michelangelo and Dostoyevsky, they can learn to say Uzoamaka."

Favorite theater to perform in? I really loved working at Circle in the Square, and for the exact same reason I loved working at Club Oberon at the A.R.T. Both spaces have such versatility, and I love being a part of that kind of kinetic, shape-shifting theater.

Did you consider becoming an opera singer? Well, my training was classical voice, and I thought that was what I would pursue. It was a great lesson in how one thing can lead you down the path to your true calling. My singing voice is a very dramatic soprano, and although I didn't pursue an opera career, that was what led me to my passion, which is theater and acting.

Most embarrassing audition? That's easy. I had an audition for a show in upstate New York, and the song that I was going to sing was "I Don't Know How to Love Him" from Jesus Christ Superstar. I couldn't remember the opening line. And it's the name of the song. I was like, "I...don't know...the lyrics..." Needless to say, I didn't get the job.

Actor you'd most like to work with? Meryl Streep, Daniel Day-Lewis and Jeffrey Wright. The reason, besides their talent, is that everyone who works with them says their work ethic is incredible—the work behind the work. And I would like to see how they do that.

Who's more responsible for comedy: the writer or the actor? That's sort of a chicken and egg thing. If the line's not funny, an actor can still get a laugh at it from the delivery, or the stuff they do before or after delivering it. But if it's well-written, you can do it with a sock puppet. So I guess it's a marriage. Comedy is a dance.

So do you ever feel obliged to drink ouzo? [Laughs] Never. And I just tried it for the first time two years ago. I was doing Godspell, and we had a ton of Greek ushers. They were the sweetest, and for Christmas, one of them gave me a bottle because she couldn't believe I'd never had it. And I was like, "Whoa. So that's what I taste like, huh?" I didn't love it. ◆

Primed for Summer

AN A-Z GUIDE TO ALFRESCO ADVENTURES

By The Improper Staff

A IS FOR AWAY GAMES

Fenway isn't the only park for fans this summer. The Red Sox and the Highland Street Foundation have teamed up for Out of the Park, bringing away games to a big screen at Franklin Park (June 22) and Boston Common (July 27), where you can snack on Fenway Franks and meet Wally the Green Monster while the Sox take on Oakland and Tampa Bay. A live band and Sox DJ TJ Connelly will pitch in, and there are no scalpers for these seats; screenings are free, so just bring your blanket. highlandstreet.org

B IS FOR BOATS, AND LOTS OF 'EM

Don't miss the boat on Aug. 23 when Community Boating aims to get all of its 170-plus vessels—including sailboats, kayaks, windsurfers and paddleboards—onto the Charles. Last year's inaugural All Boats on the Water Day brought out nearly 120 boats, a tally the country's oldest public sailing center will try to top at this year's count, followed by giveaways and a dock party. community-boating.org

C IS FOR CATWALKS AND CABANAS

Theater District hotspot Rooftop @ Revere has several new enticements for sun seekers, from SurfSet lessons that mimic the workout you'd get on the waves to "Classy Jello Shots" in flavors like spiked blackberry-ginger limeade. But we're particularly pumped for its expanded Resort on the Rooftop series. Produced with stylist Christina K. Pierce, the free fashion shows kick off with local line Mike & Ton on June 4 and continue every Wednesday at 7 pm through August. reverehotel.com/rooftop

D IS FOR DINE AND DASH

Fort Point has become instrumental in the Boston restaurant scene, so it's only fitting to serve its cuisine with a side of classical music. On June 14, the Fort Point-based Boston Virtuosi Chamber Orchestra hosts A Taste of the Arts, a restaurant crawl through the neighborhood that picks up rhythm during the last course—a multimedia concert with a string quartet, dancers and more on Atlantic Wharf. bostonvirtuosi.org

E IS FOR ESPLANADE

Skip the symphony attire and still enjoy world-class acoustics from the comfort of a picnic blanket. On July 16, Boston Landmarks Orchestra will hit the Hatch Shell to open a stacked season of free concerts, featuring collabs with the Back Bay Chorale, Longwood Symphony, Boston Lyric Opera, the New England Spiritual Ensemble and a "pocket-sized salsa orchestra," plus Christopher Wilkins leading a bicentennial celebration of "The Star-Spangled Banner." landmarksorchestra.org

F IS FOR FANCY FOOTWORK

Parks and parking lots transform into stages for Dancing in the Streets, a series of six outdoor performances popping up across Somerville through June. And during at least one show, the dancers won't be the only ones on the move: On June 20, Stefanie Weber and Creatures of Habitat will start in the alley by the Veterans Memorial Rink, but take viewers to four different locations for Auto Mobile Body Works, a piece incorporating video projections and a cast of both humans and cars. Somervilleart[illegible]un.org/dancefest

BASEBALL: ISTOCK PHOTO; BOSTON LANDMARKS ORCHESTRA: MICHAEL J. SMITH

G GUNS AND 'GANSETTS

Because nothing says summer like dressing up in period garb and railing against the Confederacy! Or, you know, kicking back with an ice-cold beer and grooving to live music. You can do both on Georges Island, home of Fort Warren, where, among other things, they'll be staging historical happenings (including a Civil War Ball and 1860s-style baseball games), holding a Narragansett beer tasting and hosting multiple Berklee Music Fests. bostonharborislands.org/georges

H HATCH

That's the theme of this year's ArtBeat, the arts fest bringing bands, dance troupes, crafts vendors and artists to Davis Square on July 18 and 19. Last year's theme, "Micro," inspired plenty of interesting projects, from a museum that measured 10x16x18 inches to a "mini-me" parade where participants walked with their small-scale pet, child or puppet doppelgangers. So we have no doubt this year's participants will think outside the egg. somervilleortscouncil.org/ortbeot/2014

I IS FOR IMAGINATION

If you can dream it, you can make it happen. That's the general idea behind Figment Boston, which takes over the Greenway on July 26 and 27. Now in its fifth year, Figment is a free participatory arts festival that encourages everyone to get involved. Past installments have included an exhibit of motion-sensitive LED lights and a clothesline hung with notes airing "dirty laundry," so we're expecting cool things. boston.figmentproject.org

J JERK

Spice things up at the second annual Boston JerkFest, where you can sample vendors' treats, try out the all-you-can-drink Rum & Brew tasting and finally put an end to your search for the best local hot sauce. The chef cook-off and food frenzy—all set to the tune of reggae and steel drums—comes to the South End on June 28. bostonjerkfest.com

K IS FOR KITE

Summers are for island getaways and chasing some tail, right? Spectacle Island was once home to a quarantine hospital and illicit casinos, but it's now the best spot in town for pulling some strings. On Saturday afternoons starting June 21, make a kite or fly your own atop the highest point in Boston Harbor. bostonharborislands.org/spectacle

L LEGS

On June 20, the 17th annual Chefs in Shorts gathers some of the city's top toques together at the Seaport World Trade Center for a blowout BBQ for a good cause. (Proceeds benefit Future Chefs, a nonprofit that helps urban teens train for culinary careers.) Along with tasty eats, the affair promises beer and wine tastings and, of course, more than 40 Boston chefs in casual attire. seaportboston.com/promotions/chefs-in-shorts.aspx

M MOBILE ART

Talk about a tricked-out ride: The Somerville Arts Council is set to unveil the Multi Use Somerville Community Roving Art Transport (M.U.S.C.R.A.T.), an old school bus they bought on the cheap and transformed into a work of art on wheels with help from local talents. Serving as a mobile arts space, it'll host classes and performances; hitch a ride when it makes its big debut at ArtBeat on July 18 and 19. somervilleortscouncil.org

NINETIES JAMS

The best way to season brisket is a pinch of Salt-N-Pepa. The '90s hip-hop duo headlines the first night of Phantom Gourmet's BBQ & Music Festival, which runs June 20-22 at Boston's City Hall Plaza. Enjoy beats and barbecue on the event's man-made beach—and if you're still hungry, consider signing up for the Nathan's Famous Hot Dog Eating Contest, a qualifier for the Coney Island finals. phantomgourmet.com

O OPERETTA

There'll be a big bat in Christopher Columbus Park on the night of June 29. No need for alarm: It's just the North End Music and Performing Arts Center's English-language performance of Die Fledermaus ("The Bat"), Strauss' fun and farcical operetta involving mistaken identities, a masked ball and—no joke—a character out for revenge on the buddy who left him passed out drunk in a bat costume in public. This third annual installment of Opera in the Park is free and semi-staged, but full ticketed performances run June 27-28 at Faneuil Hall. nempacboston.org

QUENCH

If pink isn't your favorite color, you might think differently (and drink differently) after the Boston Rosé Party on June 7. Imbibers are encouraged to dress in their rose-colored best for the three-hour cruise, which departs from Rowes Wharf and includes a DJ and an actual boatload of wine—a delightfully dry 2013 vintage of 90+ Cellars' Lot 33 Rosé from Languedoc to be precise, paired with bites from Southie fave KO Catering and Pies. bit.ly/drinkrose14

S IS FOR SANDCASTLES

BOSTON PRIDE PARADE MEG KACKLEY

IS FOR PRIDE

No disrespect to Paddy's Day—we love green beer as much as the next guy—but the Boston Pride Parade is our favorite celebratory street march of the year. Just one of the many events taking place during Pride Week, the party in the streets on June 14 culminates at City Hall Plaza with the Pride Festival, featuring five headliners, including "Same Love" songstress Mary Lambert and Glee's Alex Newell. bostonpride.org

ROUND ROBIN

A round robin of top Boston DJs, that is. The sonic showdown on Aug. 29 will close out Wavelengths, the ICA's new Friday-night series of harborside concerts and DJ dance parties. But don't wait till the very end to check it out, as the lineup includes the likes of performance-art phenom Peaches, Boston-bred synth poppers Hooray for Earth and "nightlife princess" Juliana Huxtable of New York art/drag collective House of Ladosha. icaboston.org

T TURNAROUND

The USS Constitution hasn't defended the U.S. since the middle of the 19th century, but Old Ironsides still gets out and about once a year. Its July Fourth 4.5-mile turnaround cruise through Boston Harbor lasts three hours, so you have plenty of time to spy it from the shore if you're not one of the lucky 150 people aboard. Just don't miss it this year; the ship is going into the shop until 2018. history.com/this-day-in-history/uss-constitution

U

UNDER THE STARS

Bringing your blanket or lugging your lawn chair to the MFA is worth the effort, because the museum's summer Concerts in the Courtyard series boasts one eclectic and electric lineup, from Berklee alum Sierra Hull's mandolin stylings and Debo Band's funky blend of Ethiopian pop and American soul to the Western swing of Hot Club of Cowtown and the psychedelic electro of Mauritania's Noura Mint Seymali. Or pay a bit extra for a perch on Bravo's balcony. Either way, you'll have a great view of the artists—and the summer night sky. mfa.org

One of the Bard's most appealing heroines returns to Boston Common for Commonwealth Shakespeare Company's production of Twelfth Night, last staged in 2001. This time, the popular comedy's cross-dressing lead is played by local drama queen Marianna Bassham, who's previously tackled Viola with Actors' Shakespeare Project and also garnered some gender-bending experience portraying Ben Affleck and Gwyneth Paltrow in Central Square Theater's Matt & Ben, so we have high hopes. commshakes.org

W

WATCH OUT!

For the past year, the obstacles in Somerville's new Assembly Row have been tower cranes and hazard cones, but you can swap those out for pallet walls, monkey bars and agility tunnels at Rock and Run Boston. On June 21, the 5K obstacle race tours through the new development, with live bands to motivate you at every mile (as if the after-party's beer garden wasn't enough). rockandrunboston.com

X

X MARKS THE SPOT

On June 14, channel your inner Capt. Sparrow as you pillage and plunder bar taps with a few hundred fellow buccaneers during the sixth annual Pirate Crawl. This voyage also includes a plank walk aboard a cruise around the Harbor. Eye patches and shoulder-perched parrots strongly encouraged. crawlinboston.com

It's ordinarily tough to keep calm at Fenway Park—but then, you're not usually watching the scoreboard while in a warrior pose. On June 8, the second annual FenwaYoga offers two morning yoga classes around the diamond with Mandy Ingber, instructor to Jennifer Aniston, Kate Beckinsale and Brooke Shields. Getting your Om on requires a $250 fundraising minimum, but it goes to a good cause: helping local kids through the Red Sox Foundation's Red Sox Scholars and Reviving Baseball in Inner Cities programs. fenwayoga.com

Z

IS FOR ZEBRAS AND ZINFANDEL

A trip to Franklin Park Zoo's tropical forest pavilion should be even more transporting with a wine glass in hand. On May 31 at Uncorked, the zoo's first annual wine tasting, sip selections from vendors such as the Naked Grape, Stray Dog and Greenvale Vineyards while showing the surrounding lemurs, hippos and gorillas what it really means to be a party animal. zoonewengland.org

FEST FORWARD

A LOOK AT SUMMER'S TOP 10 SHOWS

BY PAUL ROBICHEAU

Music festivals have come to command the summer, from the heart of the city—the free Summer Arts Weekend brings Los Lobos to Copley Square on July 26—to 30 miles offshore, where the inaugural Nantucket Music Festival presents Bruce Hornsby and Guster on Aug. 2-3. Yet standby local venues like the Xfinity Center and Blue Hills Bank Pavilion (still Great Woods and Harbor Lights to some of us) sport some standout shows of their own. Here are my 10 outdoor-music picks for the season. »

BOSTON CALLING MUSIC FESTIVAL

Sept. 5-7, City Hall Plaza

Saving the best for last this summer, Boston Calling outdoes itself with a blockbuster back-to-school bookend to its Memorial Day weekend bash. Yes, the headliners are even more impressive and diverse, with moody indie-rockers the National, pop prodigy Lorde, rapper Nas and the Roots (separately and together) and the scrappy Replacements, back after 20-plus years with the Neighborhoods guitarist Dave Minehan aboard. But the middle lineup is also stronger, with cult favorites Neutral Milk Hotel, Childish Gambino (the hip-hop guise of Donald Glover, moving beyond NBC's now-axed Community), alt-rockers Spoon, English upstarts the 1975 and mash-up king Girl Talk as well as the War on Drugs, the Hold Steady and our own snowballing Lake Street Dive.

ARCADE FIRE

Aug. 19, Xfinity Center

Montreal's indie-rock heroes have long had grandiose ambitions that blossom in exhilarating shows, so the band's growth into arena rock stars shouldn't come as a surprise. But Arcade Fire does it with chutzpah, mixing the arty pretension of face paint, papier-mâché masks and an expanded live band's Haitian-inspired rhythms with the festive physicality of players ever ready to throw themselves into their instruments—or into the crowd.

NEWPORT JAZZ FESTIVAL

Aug. 1-3, Fort Adams State Park, Newport, R.I.

Celebrating its 60th anniversary, Newport Jazz may transcend the week-earlier Newport Folk Festival, which continues its consistent summer brilliance with the likes of Nickel Creek, Ryan Adams, Mavis Staples and Milk Carton Kids. Newport Jazz has added its own Friday afternoon lineup, and it's a challenging doozy, highlighted by John Zorn's Masada marathon (including Dave Douglas, Marc Ribot, Greg Cohen and Joey Baron) as well as Snarky Puppy, Darcy James Argue's Secret Society and a Charlie Parker tribute by Rudresh Mahanthappa. And the rest of the weekend blends cutting edge and mainstream with Wynton Marsalis, Trombone Shorty, Robert Glasper, Brian Blade, Dr. John, Gary Burton, Vijay Iyer and Danilo Perez.

GREEN RIVER FESTIVAL

July 12-13, Greenfield Community College

With Newport Folk already sold out, this Western Massachusetts fest has booked some of the same great acts (Lucius, Trampled by Turtles, Hurray for the Riff Raff, and Norah Jones' new band Puss N Boots) as well as Josh Ritter and Trombone Shorty. But beyond its deeper-than-usual lineup on multiple stages, Green River also has hot-air balloons, offering rides and a spectacular backdrop when they rise at sunset.

NINE INCH NAILS/SOUNDGARDEN

July 29, Xfinity Center

Trent Reznor's revitalized Nine Inch Nails still boasts the most innovative light show around, with haunting, three-dimensional scrim effects as stark and unsettling as the industrial/electronic music. It'll be an extra-heavy night with grunge veterans Soundgarden celebrating the 20th anniversary of their landmark Superunknown album. Chris Cornell remains one of rock's most powerful singers, and while drummer Matt Cameron is touring with his other group, Pearl Jam, replacement Matt Chamberlain (who's worked with everyone from Tori Amos to Bruce Springsteen) ably holds down the fort.

WILLIE NELSON/ALISON KRAUSS & UNION STATION

June 17, Blue Hills Bank Pavilion; June 20, Bank of New Hampshire Pavilion at Meadowbrook

One may think country outlaw Nelson, at 81, has been mellowed by age and marijuana, but he's in good enough shape to have just earned a fifth-degree black belt. And he should be inspired on this bill with angelic singer Krauss' bluegrass group featuring dobro ace Jerry Douglas, one of a few fine double bills at Boston's renamed harborside pavilion (also see Ray LaMontagne with Jason Isbell and ZZ Top with Jeff Beck). The opener is country upstart Kacey Musgraves, which only sweetens the pot.

BEYONCÉ/JAY Z

July 1, Gillette Stadium

Jay Z must have enjoyed the stadium life teaming up last year with Justin Timberlake, since he's back at it this summer with his wife, Beyoncé. It's a wonder this power-coupling didn't happen before, and while stadiums aren't ideal for concerts, Beyoncé has the megawatt voice and razzle-dazzle choreography to make the "On the Run" tour click, with her husband as a fitting foil. Not sure about her sister Solange getting an invite.

BILLY JOEL

June 26, Fenway Park

Long Island's iconic piano man, who just turned 65, takes a break from his continuing residency at Madison Square Garden to tackle hallowed ballparks like Fenway. Backed by a band that includes veterans such as saxophonist Mark Rivera, Joel will trot out both hits and rarities from the '70s to the '90s—a sure summer kickoff from a guy with the tunes and attitude. And it'll be followed by Fenway shows from Zac Brown and Tom Petty.

THE MAVERICKS

Aug. 9, Indian Ranch, Webster

Still going strong after two decades thanks to a 2012 reunion, this eclectic alt-country outfit can echo Tex-Mex, surf-rock and even ska as well as subvert songs by Bruce Springsteen and KC and the Sunshine Band back-to-back in concert. Centered by Raul Malo's resonant voice, spiced with Eddie Perez's guitar and supplemented with horns and accordion, the Mavericks should bring the perfect party for the shed on the shores of Webster Lake.

NEKO CASE

June 28, Lowell Summer Music Series at Boarding House Park

Now rooted in Vermont, the fiery-haired Case remains a force of nature with her distinctive siren's voice, and this park, nestled among mill buildings, is a sweet setting for it. Her reflective The Worse Things Get, the Harder I Fight... was among 2013's best albums, and she and backup singer Kelly Hogan closed a Boston show in November with a couple of Heart covers. Who knows if and how Case and company will go crazy on you. ◆

SOPHOMORE SURGE

BOSTON CALLING GOES BIG IN ITS SECOND YEAR

It's only a third of the size of Lollapalooza in Chicago, with less breadth and weight in the music bookings, but Boston Calling has outdone itself, capping its second summer with a broader September lineup that's bursting with headline talent.

Mike Snow, co-founder of the urban rock festival, says that's just how things panned out, that organizers weren't out to top themselves. "It's really a balancing act between luck of the draw and timing," he says. "We were really fortunate."

The booking team, which includes his Crash Line Productions partner, co-founder Brian Appel, promoter Bowery Boston and curator Aaron Dessner of headliners the National, had been "chasing" Lorde for almost 18 months, he says. When the Replacements couldn't make the Memorial Day weekend fest, talk turned to September. Then someone brought the hip-hop collaboration between Nas and the Roots to the table. "It is a crazy combination," Snow says. "It's amazing that it got done."

Even with such a strong slate, some fans were hoping to see more DJ/electronic acts or strict indie-rock along the lines of last September's lineup, he says. "You can say, 'This is what we did last year and it worked,' and set out to do the same thing, but if eight of your top 10 bands or DJs are not touring, you say, 'I guess it's going to have to go in a different direction,'" Snow says. "You can't plan it all."

This year, adaptation also meant moving the second stage on City Hall Plaza closer to Cambridge Street because of the renovation of the Government Center T station. But Snow says the organizers are still happy with the brick-and-concrete plaza, which includes VIP terraces on City Hall overlooking the action. "We love the space," he says of the downtown setting, which offers the advantage of surrounding shelter as well as hard surfaces, so mud isn't an issue in rainy weather.

"We would have had a much different festival last May if we were in a field somewhere." ◆

METRO BOSTON'S TAPPED-IN GUIDE TO ENTERTAINMENT, CULTURE AND SMALL-BATCH BREWS

AGENDA for 5/28–6/10

Hop to it

Beer lovers unite!

ANY WINE SNOBS WHO still consider beer to be vino's lower-brow brethren would do well to drop by the American Craft Beer Fest. Presented by BeerAdvocate and Harpoon Brewery, this seventh annual celebration of craft beer is the largest of its kind on the East Coast, with more than 140 American brewers represented—and more than 640 different brews on tap. That means that whether you're a certified beer buff who knows his weissbier from his witbier or just graduating from Bud Lights to IPAs, they'll have something to suit your taste. Plus, the brewers will be on hand to talk you through some of the more intimidating suds. The fest has three sessions, and we suggest you get your tickets soon—this town has its fair share of beer lovers, and they tend to snap them up fast. / Alexandra Cavallo

ONCE MORE UPON A TIME

Is it truly possible to live "happily ever after"? That's the question for the characters in Lyric Stage Company's production of Into the Woods, the much-acclaimed fairy-tale musical that marries classic Grimm's tales with original stories, and more than one twist. Yearning to have a child, a baker and his wife embark on a magical quest through the woods, running into some of the big players along the way. Cinderella, Little Red Riding Hood, Jack and his beanstalk—they're all accounted for, but each is slightly off-kilter, breathing new life into the familiar stories. With a Tony-winning score by Stephen Sondheim, a nuanced script by James Lapine and diverse casting on the part of the Lyric Stage, this is a fresh take on some vintage tales. Get lost in the woods at the Lyric Stage Company through June 29. / Alexandra Cavallo

LADIES FIRST

For a director of many silent films, Kenji Mizoguchi's social commentary spoke pretty loudly. The filmmaker, famed for his mastery of the long take, often used his camera to shed light on women's roles in Japanese society (perhaps not so surprising, given that he saw his own sister sold into geishadom). Take Mizoguchi's personal favorite, The Life of Oharu, screening as part of the Harvard Film Archive's Tales and Tragedies of Kenji Mizoguchi series. A chronicle of a concubine's fall from grace, the film won the International Prize at the 1952 Venice Film Festival, helping shine a spotlight on Japanese cinema. See how Mizoguchi put Japanese film on the map May 31 and June 9 at the Harvard Film Archive. / Abagail Sullivan

The Amazing Spider-Man 2 ★½ After helming only two Spider-Man movies, Marc Webb has accomplished what took Sam Raimi three tries to achieve with his 2002-2007 trilogy: He's made a truly awful film. Nevertheless, Andrew Garfield's fidgety nerd suits ol' web-head's alter ego, Peter Parker, and his Spidey perfectly embodies the cocky, quippy character known to readers of the Marvel comic—something Tobey Maguire never quite nailed. Likewise, Emma Stone's Gwen Stacy is a far more appealing love interest than Kirsten Dunst's Mary Jane Watson, and no upside-down kiss is needed to sell Garfield and Stone's chemistry. Refinements in visual effects have put Webb in charge of a Spider-Man who looks utterly believable, not weightless like Maguire's clearly CGI stand-in. Alas, the poster for The Amazing Spider-Man 2 promises that "his greatest battle begins," and although the sight of our hero swinging between Manhattan skyscrapers in stereoscopic 3-D truly is amazing, his battle is obviously a corporate one; Sony envisions churning out more sequels, plus spinoffs featuring classic Spider-Foes, to help keep its business afloat. It's a nasty enterprise, and this film sinks under the weight. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Belle ★★★ Director Amma Asante's second feature is inspired by the story of Dido Elizabeth Belle (a luminous Gugu Mbatha-Raw), the mixed-race daughter of Capt. Sir John Lindsay (Matthew Goode in a cameo). Despite being illegitimate, she's raised in a loving household by her aristocratic great-uncle Lord Mansfield and his wife (Tom Wilkinson and Emily Watson, both in fine form), yet the darkness of her skin prevents her from fully participating in the traditions of her noble standing. While her white—and also illegitimate—cousin Elizabeth (Sarah Gadon) is readied for marriage, Belle is headed for a life as a wealthy spinster. But as formula dictates, she meets an attractive young idealist, John Davinier (newcomer Sam Reid, in an unfortunate wig), a lowly vicar's son. It's all captured in a candy-colored digital palette that's distressingly become the norm, flying in the face of filmed costume dramas of the past—but then, this is a story driven by change, with Davinier and Belle challenging her great-uncle to do right by his role as lord chief justice, helping bring an end to slavery in England. (At Boston Common, Kendall Square and Coolidge Corner.)

Captain America: The Winter Soldier ★★★½ Literally defrosted after 70 years, Steve Rogers (Sudbury native Chris Evans), aka Captain America, is finding it difficult to reconcile his black-and-white worldviews with the shadowy grays of 2014. Having been given darker duds (and perhaps Batman's tailor) to suit the times, he reluctantly reports to Nick Fury (Samuel Jackson), his handler at S.H.I.E.L.D., the government spy agency that assembled superhero supergroup the Avengers. Thankfully, unlike recent Marvel Comics-derived movies headlined by teammates Iron Man and Thor, Cap's superb second solo outing is less an ad for next summer's Avengers: Age of Ultron than a throwback to the paranoid thrillers of the '70s. I'm looking at you, Three Days of the Condor. So, apparently, were directors Anthony and Joe Russo, who cast that film's hero, Robert Redford, in a pivotal role here. When an attempt is made on Fury's life, exposing a cancer that's destroying S.H.I.E.L.D. from within, Cap proudly dusts off his comfy old red, white and blue outfit; the overgrown boy scout turns fugitive, answering only to his sense of right and wrong as he sets things right. America, eff yeah. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Chef ★★★ This isn't a movie about Jon Favreau. Sure, he wrote, directed and starred in this comedy about a once-hot gourmet chef, Carl Casper, who's in a creative rut. After being called out by his critics, Casper begins serving up delectable Cuban sandwiches from a food truck, winning back favor from customers and critics alike by returning to his roots. Favreau's a filmmaker who impressed with the hit indies Swingers and Made, and then a couple of massive Iron Man movies, before making the joyless critical and commercial failure Cowboys & Aliens. But Chef is a small picture, a tasty concoction in which his simmering acting chops are brought to a boil by 10-year-old Emjay Anthony, who delightfully underplays Casper's son, Percy, as the two bond over the heat of the truck's grill on a cross-country trip. Is Favreau as thin-skinned as Casper, who gets into a very public social media spat with one of his earliest supporters? Who cares, when such big talents as Dustin Hoffman, John Leguizamo, Sofia Vergara, Oliver Platt, Scarlett Johansson and Robert Downey Jr. are along for the ride? (At Boston Common and Kendall Square.)

hoarded newspapers, carting piles of them from home to home, family to family, with instructions that they never be touched. She was drawn to darker reporting, to tales of murder and secret lives. What her various employers and wards didn't know is that this eccentric woman had a secret life of her own. In death, she's attained a reputation as one of the most accomplished street photographers of the 20th century, having taken more than 100,000 photographs that went unseen—until amateur historian John Maloof purchased some contents of her storage locker by chance. Maloof and co-director Charlie Siskel's engrossing documentary chronicles his efforts to learn about the mysterious loner behind the photos. He follows a trail that leads him down a rabbit hole of conflicting accounts of the cagey recluse, as those who knew her realize on camera just how little they actually did know. It's a great story, one that Maier probably would have loved—if she weren't at the center of it. (At Kendall Square and Coolidge Corner.)

For No Good Reason ★★★ "I really thought what I would do, if I ever learned to draw properly, was I would try to change the world," Ralph Steadman says at the start of Charlie Paul's illuminating documentary about the 77-year-old British artist. We should consider ourselves damned lucky that Steadman never quite learned from others' traditional illustration techniques—otherwise we may have never been exposed to his crazed use of spattered ink, the rare technique he uses to start his drawings. And, in a way, he did change the world, as his longtime collaboration with Hunter S. Thompson gave life to gonzo journalism. What would Fear and Loathing in Las Vegas be without his demented drawings, he asks narrator Johnny Depp, a close friend of the late Thompson who memorably played the author in Terry Gilliam's unhinged adaptation of the gonzo classic (and not-so-memorably appeared as Thompson's surrogate in The Rum Diary). Depp interviews Steadman while bearing witness to some of that unorthodox creativity. Steadman's style, he reveals, was spawned from a 1970 trip to Manhattan's Skid Row. It shows, wonderfully. (At Kendall Square.)

Heaven Is for Real ★★ If you doubt that this painfully earnest new film from director Randall Wallace (writer of Braveheart) may be a crass cash-in on the ticket-buying power of Christians, consider that it's also a none-too-transparent pitch for Spider-Man, another property from Sony, the studio behind this film adaptation of pastor Todd Burpo's book of the same title. Colton (strong newcomer Connor Corum), the 4-year-old son of Todd and Sonja (Greg Kinnear and Kelly Reilly, both good), is surrounded by swag featuring Marvel's web-headed hero, from the posters hanging on his wall to a bedside Spider-Man lampshade. He carries his wall-crawling action figure everywhere, finally dropping Spidey when he loses consciousness as he's wheeled into life-threatening surgery. Even then, Sonja clings to the toy, while Todd gets angry at God. Colton survives, but he claims to have visited heaven. Could it be true? The declarative title leaves little room for debate, although the real shocker is not that Jesus looks exactly like Kenny Loggins, but that Colton's savior isn't Peter Parker. (In the suburbs.)

Locke ★★★½ Put a man inside a box with nothing but a cellphone, and you might end up with Buried, 90 minutes of cheap emotional manipulation with Ryan Reynolds. Do the same with Tom Hardy, but behind the wheel of a BMW, and you witness what a remarkable actor is capable of when you can't take your eyes off him. It helps that Hardy has a crackling script by Steven Knight (writer of Dirty Pretty Things and Eastern Promises), who also directs. Although audiences are most familiar with Hardy as Bane in The Dark Knight Rises, the villain's respirator hampered one of Hardy's best tools: his voice. While you could hear muffled hints of Sean Connery in that performance, here you comprehend every dulcet tone of the Richard Burton-derived Welsh patois he utilizes as Ivan Locke, a dedicated worker and family man. After a fateful decision sets off a chain reaction, Locke's world unravels during the course of a claustrophobic nighttime drive, his job and home life hanging in the balance. Riveting. (At Boston Common, Kendall Square and West Newton.)

Million Dollar Arm ★★★ As formulaic baseball pictures go, Disney's Jerry Maguire-like tale of a beleaguered sports agent doesn't quite hit a home run, but it reaches base thanks to a winning script by Thomas McCarthy, who navigates the predictable tropes of the genre like a pro, and Jon Hamm, who uses his gravelly voice to project the world-weariness that his central role requires. As JB Bernstein, the agent who faces stiff competition from bigger-bankrolled competitors, Hamm brings his A-game for director Craig Gillespie, who coaches a team of seasoned actors, including Lake Bell, Bill Paxton, Alan Arkin and Aasif Mandvi, as Bernstein's partner Aash. Mounting an unconventional recruitment strategy, Bernstein travels to untapped India to find cricket players (Slumdog Millionaire's Madhur Mittal and Life of Pi's Suraj Sharma) suited to pitching in the major leagues. Based on a true story, Million Dollar Arm scores a solid triple. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Neighbors ★★ A movie directed by Nicholas Stoller (Forgetting Sarah Marshall), starring Seth Rogen and Rose Byrne? Must be a Judd Apatow production, right? Perhaps, if it ran more than two hours—but this comedy about a couple, their newborn and their war with the frat next door is a scant 96 minutes long. Sounds like a good thing, until you watch it and realize it would elicit more laughs if cut down to, say, trailer length—and, truth be told, the trailer was pretty amusing. So, naturally, the best bits appear in said trailer. Despite a delightful comedic turn by Zac Efron (who knew?) as Teddy Sanders, leader of Delta Psi Beta and tormentor of Mac and Kelly Radner (Rogen and Byrne), aided by Greek brothers Pete (Dave Franco, further distinguishing himself from real-life brother James) and Scoonie (an underutilized, way underdressed Christopher Mintz-Plasse), many setups go nowhere, and what few punch lines exist are obvious and mostly miss their mark. When Rogen's Mac argues that he should be the Kevin James surrogate, another realization hits: He already is. (At Boston Common, Fenway, Somerville and in the suburbs.)

Only Lovers Left Alive ★★★★ With all of the religious-themed movies that have been making the rounds in cinemas recently, you'll be forgiven if you think you're in for more of the same from a film featuring lovers named Adam and Eve. But you'll realize soon enough that these two are a bit out of place for a Biblical tale—they only spring to life under the glare of the moon. That's right, we're in for a vampire movie. But this is no Twilight. As played by Tom Hiddleston and Tilda Swinton, they're a different breed of bloodsucker than the tweens are used to. Like their director, Jim Jarmusch (Mystery Train, Down by Law), Adam and Eve are creators, repudiating fame, preferring to disseminate their works quietly. They derisively refer to those who consume their art as "zombies." That is to say, us—the drones who pay 12 bucks to get our Friday night cinematic fix. It's A Portrait of Artists as the Undead, as imagined by Jarmusch, who clearly had fun creating another of his wonderful exercises in mood and style. (At Kendall Square, Coolidge Corner and in the suburbs.)

Palo Alto ★★★ What is it with the Coppola women and their attraction to the amoral ennui of overprivileged youth? Sofia examined the alarmingly nonchalant teenagers behind a string of Beverly Hills break-ins in last year's The Bling Ring, and now her 27-year-old niece (and granddaughter of Godfather filmmaker Francis) Gia Coppola makes an assured writing and directing debut adapting James Franco's underwhelming book of short fiction, Palo Alto: Stories. The third-generation filmmaker nevertheless finds some interesting—if not wholly original—hooks to hang her film on, from underaged drinking parties to high school slut-shaming. Emma Roberts (Julia's niece) plays shy, virginal April, and Jack Kilmer (Val's son) is Teddy, an introspective soul under the corrupting influence of his dangerously unpredictable pal, Fred (Nat Wolff). Teddy has eyes for April, but then, so does her soccer coach Mr. B., played by Franco—casting that should sound alternately brilliant and creepy to the actor's Twitter followers. While lacking her granddad's storytelling prowess, Coppola displays visual and aural flair, navigating around any charges of nepotism. Yes, even with the Roberts and Kilmer kids. (At Kendall Square.)

BRIGHT LIGHGHT

New York-based Kaoru Ishibashi is renowned as a classically trained violinist, but he's also a guitarist, percussionist, keyboardist, vocalist and master loop technician. That last skill is front and center on his sophomore album, Lighght (recorded under the moniker Kishi Bashi), which finds the talented multi-instrumentalist producing soaring avant-pop that threads his bright vocals with shimmering layered arrangements built upon his classical foundations. In the past, Ishibashi has collaborated and toured with the likes of singer/songwriter Regina Spektor and alt-rockers Of Montreal. Now, he's headlining his own shows. BROOCH THE SUBJECT

Sometimes, the right accessory says it all. Such was the case with former Secretary of State Madeleine Albright, who became the highest-ranking woman in the history of U.S. government upon her appointment in 1997. Her flair for statecraft wasn't limited to words: Albright became known for her extensive collection of pins that subtly—and often cheekily—communicated her opinions. (A journalist once called her a "serpent," and soon after a gold snake pin adorned her chest.) More than 200 pieces from her collection (including this foxy number) are on display in Read My Pins from June 9 through July 20 at the Davis Museum at Wellesley College. / Spencer Shannon

CATCHER IN THE LIE

One might think that Joanna Rakoff got a lousy deal when her post-grad school pursuit of poetry landed her a glorified secretary job. But that entry-level gig just happened to be with J.D. Salinger's literary agent. In My Salinger Year, Rakoff recounts her time answering letters addressed to the reclusive author. Tasked with responding to his many fans through a form letter, Rakoff, who had previously never read Salinger's works, was inspired to go off-script. Her newfound devotion to the author's admirers led her to write back as Salinger—allowing her to discover her own voice in the process. Catch the whole story at Porter Square Books on June 9. / Elissa Bernstein

Restaurants

BACK DECK Professional Backyard Grilling [2 West Street (Corner of Washington), Boston, 617-670-0320, BackDeckBoston.com] Drawing inspiration from a New England back yard and featuring a menu of grill-focused favorites and patio sipping cocktails, Back Deck is an urban oasis in downtown Boston. With floor to ceiling windows and an open kitchen, Back Deck brings the outdoors inside and provides the perfect setting to enjoy the fun and flavor of hard-wood charcoal grilling year round.

THE BLACK ROSE [160 State Street, Boston, 617-742-2286, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Voted one of America's top ten Irish establishments, The Black Rose is Boston's premier Irish pub and restaurant. Established in 1976, the pub is located in the historic Faneuil Hall/Quincy Market area of Boston, and known far and wide for its convivial atmosphere, good food and live Irish entertainment. The menu features honest, made-from-scratch food including traditional Irish fare, award winning clam chowder, fish and chips, native lobster, aged Black Angus cuts of beef, and of course Mother Sweeney's corned beef a recipe from Mother Sweeney herself! For thirty years The Black Rose has offered live Irish music seven nights a week. Memorable guests on stage have included members of the Chieftans, flutist James Galway, Tommy Makim, Liam Clancy, John Denver, and a once relatively unknown member of an Irish rock group called U2.

BROWNSTONE [11 Dartmouth Street, Boston, MA, 617-867-4142, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Situated on the border of Back Bay and the South End, Brownstone is named for the style and elegance reflective of the architecture of Boston's two neighborhoods. From the hardwood flooring to the Venetian plaster ceiling, the interior exudes classic warmth with a sleek and intimate bar made of mahogany and granite. Brownstone's menu features small plates with big flavors! It also has one of the best brunches in Back Bay and Monthly Beer and Wine Dinners.

CENTRAL WHARF CO. [160 Milk Street, Boston. 617-451-9460, centralwharf@irishconnection.com] The most recent addition to the Glynn Hospitality Group portfolio, Central Wharf Co. located on Milk Street is the newest hot spot in the financial district. Whether you are coming for dinner or meeting friends for some of our hand crafted cocktails, Central Wharf's welcoming atmosphere is reaffirmed by its gastronomic offerings. With a focus on healthy preparations and locally sourced ingredients, their simple comfort foods concepts are enhanced buy their contemporary accompaniment

COOGANS [171 Milk Street, Boston, 617-451-7415, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Located on the corner of laid back and good times, Coogan's is a business man's retreat by day and party people destination by night. Just on the edge of the Financial District, Coogan's is a cozy little neighborhood bar. Friendly Staff serves up fresh American style pub food and some of the best deals in Boston.

FORUM [755 Boylston St Boston MA 02116, 857-991-1831, forumboston.com] Gather, indulge, repeat! Forum is located across from the Mandarin Oriental hotel and Lord & Taylor shops, overlooking glitzy Boylston Street, a hotspot for locals, tourists and celebrities. Two distinct floors, al fresco dining, two bars, and a modern function room for up to 60 guests. Indulge in New American cuisine such as Duck Confit, Halibut on Lobster Chorizo Risotto, Bone Marrow Encrusted Filet, or Wild Mushrooms Gnocchi. Open Daily.

HURRICANE O'REILLY'S [150 Canal Street, Boston, 617-722-0161, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] It's Hurricane season on Canal Street! The spirit of Mardi Gras and the French Quarter in the heart of the city. Serving Irish, American and Cajun specialties and conveniently located just steps away from the TD Garden. Voted best "Hockey Bar" in Boston by USA today, Hurricane's is the perfect place to gather pre- and post-game. After the sun sets on Canal Street, Hurricane's lights up into one of Boston's hottest nightclubs with a top 40 play list, illuminating disco lights and 6,800 square feet of Mardi Gras spirit.

MISTRAL [223 Columbus Ave, Boston, 617-867-9300, mistralbistro.com] Located in Boston's stylish South End, Mistral features the award winning French Mediterranean cuisine of Chef/Owner Jamie Mammano. The dining room's high ceilings and arched floor to ceiling windows encircle the candlelit room and evoke a warm feeling of casual sophistication. Le Salon du Mistral, Mistral's private dining room provides an intimate setting for gatherings of 60 seated for brunch, lunch and dinner and up to 80 for a cocktail reception. Sunday Brunch. Dinner Sunday-Saturday. Complimentary car service available in metro Boston.

NUBAR [16 Garden St., Cambridge MA, 02138, 617-234-1365, nubarcambridge.com] Nubar is an elegant, but comfortable neighborhood restaurant in the Harvard Square area. Chef Bill Flumerfelt's menu is creative American, with Mediterranean accents, sourcing locally whenever available. The wine list and our original cocktails will tickle your palette – great flavors for reasonable $.Whether you're in our fireside lounge, at our glowing honey onyx bar, or on our leather banquettes in the main dining room, you'll love our space.

OSTRA [1 Charles Street South, Boston, 617.421.1200, www.ostraboston.com] Ostra, located in Boston's Back Bay, is a contemporary Mediterranean seafood restaurant. Chef/Owner Jamie Mammano and Executive Chef Mitchell Randall focus on specialty seafood found throughout the Mediterranean and regions within the U.S. The dining room at Ostra evokes a sense of style and sophistication in a comfortable and inviting setting. Ostra also offers a fine bar and lounge area featuring live piano entertainment. Ostra's private dining room accommodates up to 42 for a seated event and 70 for a cocktail reception. Dinner Sunday through Saturday. Complimentary car service available in metro Boston.

SUNSET GRILL & TAP [130 Brighton Ave., Allston, 617-254-1331] SUNSET CANTINA [916 Commonwealth Ave., Boston, 617-731-8646] Don't just come for Boston's Best Beer Selection featuring 112 taps and 300 microbrews. Come also to enjoy Boston's award winning steam beer burgers and famous curly fries, original buffalo wings and giant nachos. Still hungry? Try our juicy BBQ steak tips, grilled fish, homemade pastas, tender Yankee ribs or our sizzling fajitas. Full menu until 1 a.m.

TEATRO [177 TremontStreet, Boston, 617-778-6841, teatroboston.com] A leading player in downtown's Theatre District, Teatro offers Chef Owner Jamie Mammano's take on rustic Italian cuisine. The restaurant recalls lavish stage productions and high drama with its stunning arched mosaic ceiling and marble inlaid walls. The triumphant curtain call — a riveting open kitchen. Enjoy pre- and post-show cocktails, plus your star turn for dinner Tuesday through Sunday evenings. (Closed Monday).

Bars & Clubs

DILLON'S [955 Boylston Street, Boston, 617-421-1818, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Dillon's blends after-work chill with cocktail chic. It's the ideal spot to bring a date, loosen your tie after work or watch the game with friends. Built in 1887 and a historic landmark in Boston, the venue is named after Capt. S. Dillon, who was stationed here from 1920-1950. Like its namesake, Dillon's is known for its warm hospitality, engaging people and spirited nightlife. An all American menu, two levels, and the best patio in the Back Bay make Dillon's a local favorite. The best place on Boylston to celebrate!

CLERYS [113 DARTMOUTH STREET, BOSTON, 617-262-9874, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Located a block from Copley Plaza at the corner of Dartmouth and Columbus, this bistro and bar has consistently earned the title "Boston's Best Neighborhood Bar". Enjoy one of the 21 draught beers, either at one of t he three bars, by the bistro windows, or by the fireplace in a cozy booth when the fickle New England weather turns cold. It's the perfect place to meet friends and enjoy a comfortable atmosphere with fast & friendly bartenders. On select nights partake in team trivia or dance the night away with DJ Rhythm Nights. Downstairs is a private and roomy space featuring a full bar and dance floor, and is the perfect nook for company functions and holiday parties.

EVERYONE'S A CRITIC

How many hotties can you squeeze into Red Lantern? A lot, judging by Dinnerfest, the fundraiser for Victory Programs, which billed itself as the "foodie event to feel good about."

Spotted among the throng at the dinner and auction: the smoldering Sergio Mazon, acerbic organist Sammy Levitt, modish blonde Laura Baldini, culture vultures Kyle and Greg Hemingway Dickinson, the delectable Richard Gordon, the toothsome twosome of David Brown and Ben Perkins, amateur underwear model Scott Galinsky, the snacky Mike Gettings, Mr. Bedside Manner John Coombs, stylist to the stars Sal Malafronte and banking bigshot Darin Contini, the Hat Sisters, the Sisters of Perpetual Indulgence and sister from another mister Verna Turbulence, as well as one woman who had recently received a shipment of sex toys from a friend and wanted to donate them to charity.

The award for cattiest remark went to the person who said, "Just because she fits into that bustier doesn't make her a good bartender."

KA-CHING!

Anyone who said, "Looks like a million bucks," at the Spotlight Speetaeular would've been right for several reasons, one of them being that's what the evening raised for the Huntington Theatre Company.

Held at the Park Plaza Castle, the event honored author/investor/bon vivant (and Improper columnist) John Spooner, and they pulled out all the stops on everything from the food to the entertainment, to the point that there was a standing ovation before the salad was even served.

Present and accounted for: the Spooner brood, including Nick, Amanda and Scott, finely tuned tastemaker Susan Kaplan, uber-impresario Mary Zimmerman, erudite opinion maker Adrian Walker, love bugs Samantha Strauss and Jonathan Hanman, arts patron Teddy Cutler, Cottage Farmers Lloyd and Diane Gordon, the soignée Joyce Linde, Hitchcock blonde Nancy Korman, the unsinkable Mary Johnson, white-hot actresses Lauren Molina and McCaela Donovan, the absurdly charismatic Peter DuBois, the always dapper Ron Druker, party pair Donald Nelson and Neal Balkowitsch, the bejeweled Debbie Lewis with her affable other half, Bob Grinberg, Chestnut Hillions Cokie and Lee Perry, design hotshot Stephen Martyak and one woman wearing a vintage Cartier brooch that nearly resulted in puncture wounds every time she kissed someone hello.

Before dinner, the incomparable Kevin Carolan performed, and things only got better from there.

"It's only Monday night. I'm going to need the rest of the week to recover," said one guest. However, major props go to the guy whose blowout birthday bash was the night before, but still showed up looking dapper as all get-out... prompting a friend to remark, "Preparation H under the eyes hides a multitude of sins."

IN VINO EMPTIO

A sure sign of a good party: There's a massage therapist giving free rubdowns right beyond the coat check.

That was just the first of many delights at the Company One Gala, held at the Artists for Humanity EpiCenter. The evening, which honored Emerson theater impresario Rob Orchard, attracted the likes of much-loved minister Liz Walker, on hand to see her son Nik perform, Haitian hipster Ferguson Herivaux, statuesque beauty Victoria Marsh, Sicilian smoke show Joe Todaro, New York club sensation Nikki Exotika, the dangerously gorgeous design twosome of Amber Lu and Candice Wu, the fleet-footed Khalid Hill, Krump King Russell Ferguson, legal eagle Matthew Kozol and more stylistas than you can shake a stick at, including the woman who said, "I have Swarovski eyelashes, and I'm vajazzled."

"It's only Monday night. I'm going to need the rest of the week to recover."

The eclectic crew made for some highly entertaining interactions, the performances were well worth the price of admission, and you'd be hard-pressed to find a more attractive crowd.

The evening's only downside: The bartenders stopped pouring drinks during the speaking portion of the evening, prompting one guest to complain, "If you expect me to bid in the auction, you have to at least get me buzzed." ◆

MY GRANDFATHER WAS A FISHERMAN who sailed out of Gloucester; my dad grew up with salted cod hanging in the cellar of their house in Dorchester. That cod is red-listed now, and my younger brother, who drafts memoranda for senators on fisheries management, lovingly polices the whole family's seafood purchases.

For a lot of New Englanders, summer dining is synonymous with seafood, but if some local toques have their way, our affection for clam bakes, scrod and lobster tails might expand to encompass hake, tautog, weakfish and whelks. In this issue, MC Slim JB talks to talented chefs who are proving that these and other species once written off as bait and by-catch are not just comparatively sustainable choices, but delicious ones, too.

Elsewhere, Andrew Rimas rounds up some of the most interesting raw dishes in town, plates that suit the season and let every ingredient shine. Alexandra Cavallo taps chefs for backyard BBQ pairings to go with their favorite local summer brews. And in advance of her performance with the Pops, Jonathan Soroff interviews Melissa Etheridge, who, it turns out, found one of her first gigs playing at a seafood house on Boylston Street. Bon appétit.

CRACKING THE CASE

CHEFS DISH ON [illegible] FAVORITE SUMMER BREWS »»

Brew Stories

When Narragansett announced its new Del's Shandy, a collaboration with Del's Lemonade that's the second release in its "Hi Neighbor Mash-Up" series, people across New England (and people across our office) were buzzing. The summer beer can be found at a limited number of stores and bars; we tracked it down at Tavern Road, where we asked chef Louie DiBiccari what he'd serve with the shandy, if he were throwing a backyard BBQ. That got us thinking: What other local beers are chefs in this town drinking this summer? We tapped just a few for their recommendations—plus their favorite summer jams to drink to. / Alexandra Cavallo

Louie DiBiccari | Tavern Road
The Beer: Narragansett Del's Shandy
The BBQ: "Sweet pork sausage, cherry peppers, fennel, onions and a soft potato roll. And Doritos."
The Jam: "'Damn It Feels Good to Be a Gangsta' by Geto Boys and Scarface."

Jeff Pond | Area Four
The Beer: "Jack's Abby's Berliner Weisse. It's crisp, tart and relatively low alcohol."
The BBQ: "Yakitori. Beer goes great with chicken wings, and I like a chicken wing with a twist. I don't have everything to prep in the most traditional manner, but you can fake it with a marinade, smoke and glaze."
The Jam: "Anything by Ray Charles."

Steve "Nookie" Postal | Commonwealth
The Beer: "We have the Whirlpool on draft from Night Shift right now. It's one of our favorite summer beers—refreshing and bright, with notes of citrus and ripe peaches."
The BBQ: "All you need is super fresh fish, classic clam bake spices and a bowl of buttermilk. And a lemon."
The Jam: "'Summertime' by Will Smith."

Joe Cassinelli | The Painted Burro
The Beer: "This one is a tossup between Night Shift and Slumbrew. Night Shift makes an amazing wheat ale called Bee Tea.... My other all-time favorite beer come summer time is the Lobstah Killah from Slumbrew. It's a full-flavored imperial red ale that clocks in at eight percent ABV, so it's a sipper certainly, not a chugger."
The BBQ: "Wood-fired steak tips and grilled summer vegetables."
The Jam: "Unquestionably—Beastie Boys!"

Brian Poe | The Tip Tap Room
The Beer: "Newburyport Brewing Green Head IPA, either on draft at Tip Tap or in a can in the backyard. It reminds me of summer days spent on Plum Island Beach Reserve, swatting greenheads off my sunscreen, with a little tiny saltwater buzz at the end of the day of fishing, with clams as the sun sets. I [also] love Baxter Summer Swelter because it's like an effervescent, hoppy sauvignon blanc in a beer can, and it's a refreshing beer that goes with summer tomato salads or grilled or raw oysters. I've even gone as far as using it in a vinaigrette. (I swear I was sober when I made it.)"
The BBQ: "I would do a grilled or seared flaky white fish rubbed with fresh garlic, ginger and basil, and topped with my favorite summer go-to: a peach, jalapeno and basil salsa (with a little Baxter mixed in for fun). Serve with a side of beer-boiled potato, celery leaf and basil salad."
The Jam: "For a chill evening sunset, while cooking, it would be Otis Redding's '[Sittin' on] The Dock of the Bay.' It's that nice 'left my home in Georgia, headed for the Frisco Bay' verse that gets me every time."

RAINBOWS FOR ALL

A SOUTH END SPOT FOR GOOD SPORTS

Is the new Cathedral Station sports bar and pub a real, authentic, honest-to-goodness gay bar? After all, one of the owners, Bill Svetz, worked at the late and lamented Fritz for 30 years, and many residents say the South End, which isn't the gay haven it once was, could use a gathering place that's more than just gay-friendly. Svetz says he's proud to be flying the rainbow flag at the former Red Fez location, but that "exclusivity is not what I'm looking for." He adds, "We're catering to the entire community," although he expects to draw a mostly LGBT clientele when doors open on June 12. It's an approach he sums up as "a good, healthy focus" for the business.

Expect an inclusive venue where "older gay gentlemen can hang out," where management supports every facet of the gay sports community, from softball to hockey to volleyball, and where the brunch menu recreates the Fritz experience on Saturdays and Sundays from 10 am to 3 pm. It's a place that can handle a crowd—the patio, dining room and bar area each accommodate 100 people—and there's enough parking for 30 cars. Seven TVs display extensive sports coverage, and the game room boasts a pool table, a video machine and dart boards. What's more, Svetz promises that the menu, which is served from 5 to 9 every night except Sunday, will feature more reasonable price points than many South End restaurants.

Centre of Attention

When it comes to changing a neighborhood institution, it's best to move cautiously. And so the team behind Jamaica Plain's Tres Gatos, which has taken over the Centre Street Cafe, will maintain the latter venue's commitment to offering its beloved brunch. The name will also stay the same, but the "new concept won't be unveiled until the fall," according to the team's publicist. We do know the new Centre Street Cafe will "focus on vegetable-based eating and a commitment to working with local farmers."

ROYAL RISE

KING ST. TAVERN TAKES A NEW APPROACH.

FORMER PATRONS OF WOODWARD, WHICH closed last year, will find a familiar sight at the new King St. Tavern in the Ames Boston Hotel. The chic white shelving behind the bar remains mostly the same, and the layout within the dining space almost mirrors the previous spot. Heck, even a few of the staff members from Woodward have returned, including general manager Christina Tommasino and head bartender Jesse Dupuis.

But don't be fooled by appearances. While the decor might not have changed much, the experience offered at King St., which opened this month, is royally different from its predecessor.

Start with the food, which leaves little for the customer to worry about. The menu is a four-course prix-fixe (prices will be in the $35 to $65 range), and everyone is served the same first three courses: bruschetta, soup and a deconstructed chopped salad. For your fourth course, you choose a protein from a chalkboard menu of nine to 12 offerings, each accompanied by a side of truffle fries.

"We wanted to deviate from the traditional tavern food that is prevalent in this area, and we wanted to give everyone an experience," Tommasino says.

That experience extends to another aspect of King St., which offers live music every night. The weekly schedule features a specific genre on each day—for instance, former American Idol contestant Erika Van Pelt performs on Tuesdays, while a DJ from JAM'N-FM (94.5) spins on Fridays.

The artists occupy a stage in the back of the space, and there will be plenty of standing room around the nearby bar, where Dupuis will be offering cocktails from a menu that's expected to change seasonally. One drink Tommasino thinks will be a showstopper is the New Classic, made with rye, Aperol and yellow Chartreuse and topped with a flamed orange. The bar is expected to draw a steady after-work crowd, with complimentary hors d'oeuvres available during happy hour, before taking on a decidedly different vibe later in the night when the music begins.

"We're really pushing into Boston's music scene," Tommasino says. "The feel will change throughout the night."

For Tommasino, the best change is that's she's back working in the same space she felt so connected to: "I love this building. I love this space. I was really excited to come back."

Q&A

THUMBS UP

Cult filmmaker John Waters, director of Pink Flamingos, Polyester and Hairspray, is known for taking his audiences on wild rides. For his new book, Carsick, he becomes the passenger, hitchhiking from Baltimore to San Francisco armed with his signature pencil-thin mustache and a cardboard sign reading, "I'm not psycho." The Pope of Trash reads at the Brattle Theatre on June 14. / Hannah Sheinberg

DO YOU THINK HITCHHIKING IS GOING TO MAKE A COMEBACK? I think it should! Sure, there's a little danger, but there's danger to never try[ing] things, too. I don't know—I've never had anything bad happen to me hitchhiking, but people I know have, and I don't want to be blamed if somebody reads the book and goes right out and gets murdered the first time they hitchhike. You have to use common sense. I didn't get along with murderers. How you get along with all types of people really helps with hitchhiking.

WHAT GIVES YOU THE MOTIVATION TO STAY SO ADVENTUROUS IN YOUR CAREER? I always think tomorrow is going to be better and more exciting. I'm never the kind of person to say, "Oh, it was more fun when I was young." I think hackers are having as much fun as I had when we were throwing horsesh-- at the police at Yale for Bobby Seale. I always think that tomorrow's gonna be more fun. The only thing I'm afraid of is to stay home all the time, and to never change, and never be open to new things. Now I'm 68, so I do think my street cred should go up a little—I did hitchhike across America by myself with no backup.

DO YOU THINK A LOT OF PEOPLE STOPPED FOR YOU BECAUSE THEY KNEW WHO YOU WERE? No, I think maybe only one did instantly, and that was the first ride I ever got. But maybe a third of them drove past me and said, "Is that John Waters? It couldn't be. Why would he be standing there?" And then they came back and picked me up. And some came over to give me money and didn't even know, and then realized it was me and started laughing and screaming. And many, they'd talk, and I'd say I was a film director, and they'd just look at me like, "Sure," like I was a crazy homeless person with these delusions of grandeur that thought I was a film director. You could tell they didn't believe me. They were very touching; they tried to give me money and stuff. People were very kind.

Good Eats: Second Servings

With any luck, the second location of Sa Pa, which recently opened in Cleveland Circle, will be the neighborhood's gateway toward a revitalized restaurant scene. What the modern Vietnamese cafe lacks in authenticity, it makes up for with a cheery paint job, late-night service and food that's just plain tasty. Case in point: the banh mi, which features your choice of protein (get the tender shreds of Saigon BBQ pulled pork), plus pickled carrot and daikon, cucumber, cilantro, spicy mayo and a decadent mushroom-walnut pâté, all tucked into a crisp, toasty baguette. / Elizabeth Bomze

Happy as a Clam

When Chubby and Bessie Woodman opened a little concession stand in 1914, they had no idea it would become a roadside sensation—and, legend has it, the birthplace of the deep-fried clam. (Chubby made his first batch after a customer jokingly suggested he dunk the bivalves in the potato chip fryer.) Five generations and 100 years later, Woodman's of Essex has withstood the changing tides, as shown by the seafood shack's impressive stats. / Abagail Sullivan

STALK MARKET

One can only eat so much rhubarb pie. But for those looking to make the most of the plant's peak season, here are four chefs who aren't saving the dessert staple for the last course. / Sarah Hagman & Hannah Sheinberg

Burrata Bruschetta at Picco
Sous-chef Tony Lawrence tops slices of toasted sourdough with burrata, olive oil, preserved lemon, roasted pistachios and, for a touch of sweetness, rhubarb, which he pickles to give the appetizer more crunch. "Dressing [rhubarb] up with some salt and vinegar works more easily then turning a peach or a strawberry into a savory dish," Lawrence says.

Grilled Peking Duck Breast at Post 390
After soaking rhubarb in house-made strawberry simple syrup, sous-chef Nick Deutmeyer sautes the vegetable, adding English peas, mint and prosciutto to create a salad that's topped with medium-rare duck breast and toasted sliced almonds. One item he says you won't find in this dish: the rhubarb's leaves, which are poisonous.

Smoked Duck Breast with Grits and Rhubarb and Cardamom Consomme at the Dining Room
Executive chef Andreas Edlbauer of the Dining Room, the recently launched restaurant-within-a-restaurant at the North End waterfront's Living Room, brings Southern flavor to this savory dish. He serves rhubarb and cardamom consomme with South Carolina-sourced grits—cooked for six hours—and boiled peanuts.

Market Oysters at the Sinclair
"I think labeling ingredients 100 percent either [sweet or savory] limits you," says chef Matt Cunningham. To balance the oysters' salty notes, he likes to serve them with pickled rhubarb and shiso in place of cocktail sauce.

Drink of the Moment

KRAUT-ARETTO SAUER

PRICE: $9

INGREDIENTS: Luxardo amaretto, Imbue Bittersweet Vermouth, sauerkraut brine, lemon juice, orange zest

INVENTOR: Bar manager Billy Weston

ORIGIN: This play on an amaretto sour is Bronwyn's first cocktail featuring sauerkraut brine, but Weston has incorporated the kitchen's ingredients into drinks before. "The kitchen and the bar have sort of a symbiotic relationship," he says. Other culinary castoffs that find their way into drinks include rumtopf—"essentially a rum, sugar and fruit infusion"—and ginger tea.

FLAVOR: You'll find sweetness and nuttiness from the amaretto, bitterness from the vermouth and a "pickle-y funk" from the sauerkraut juice that's finished with the lemon's "little pop of acidity." And it all works. Weston notes, "It's definitely a drink that requires somebody to be OK with a sweeter style of cocktail, but it's not a sweet cocktail.... It hits you with the sour punch."

PAIR IT WITH: The Sauerbraten ($26). "It's a sweet and sour braised beef brisket."

VARIATIONS: Look to the brunch menu for another sip with sauerkraut: It's blended into the Bloody Mary.

PHILOSOPHY: "Beer is the driving force behind the bar, for sure," Weston says. But guests will also find nine house cocktails, seasonal offerings and 14 schnapps (plus another five off the menu). When it comes to his customers, he says, "I [take] cues on what they're not saying, in order to give them exactly what they need. Not what they want, what they need." He enjoys making something you may not have initially gone for—like a cocktail with sauerkraut brine. / Sarah Hagman

LOVE IS FOR THE DOGS

A SEQUEL FINDS A VETERINARIAN GRAPPLING WITH RELATIONSHIPS, HUMAN AND OTHERWISE.

Dog Gone, Back Soon* by Nick Trout
Published by Hyperion, 336 pages, $15
The author is a surgeon at Angell Animal Medical Center.

A SEQUEL TO 2013's THE PATRON SAINT OF Lost Dogs, Nick Trout's second novel returns to veterinary pathologist Cyrus Mills, a self-deprecating introvert whose take on the people around him—dog owners and colleagues included—is as astute as his diagnoses, and funny to boot.

Cyrus has reluctantly taken over his father's Vermont vet business, Bedside Manor, which faces competition from the loathsomely commercialized chain Healthy Paws. In addition to the rival practice, Cyrus must contend with neurotic pet owners, sad situations (such as a lonely woman who keeps her stuffed dead canine for company) and several dog mysteries, one of which leads him to adopt Stash, whose owner is dying. Then there's his love life. A wily teenager fixes Cyrus up with her mom, Dr. Honey, falsifying his identity and hiding the fact that he's a rival vet. But he fends off her predatory advances, as his heart belongs to the waitress Amy, first flirtatious, then maddeningly elusive. Cyrus investigates her mysterious behavior and explores his own tortured feelings, all the while maintaining a sharp eye for the nuttiness of those around him. And Trout keeps his witty, twist-filled tale trotting along at a brisk pace.

FROM PAGE 48: Obviously, women are not my area of expertise. Taking this dare went against my better judgment. When I open up, I do so in carefully controlled increments; however, Amy makes...made me want to try. Okay, it's a ridiculous reaction to a woman I barely know from a diner and from being trapped with her in an X-ray darkroom, but I stopped redacting the bits of me I didn't want her to see—yes, even the intangible, emotional bits—because I could sense the possibilities. In short, I let down my guard. ◆

To acclimate to the altitude, buy disposable oxygen inhalers, available at convenience stores. They can mean the difference between enjoying yourself and a blinding headache that lasts for days.

Even with the slopes closed, there are still reasons to visit the mountain, which offers lift rides, a summer concert series and guided zip line tours.

WELL CRESTED: Whether you hike, bike or ride, you'll find outdoor thrills in Crested Butte, Colorado.

The Escape Artist / Jonathan Soroff

APRÈS SKI SEASON

AFTER THE SLOPES SHUT DOWN, CRESTED BUTTE OFFERS PLENTY OF ADVENTURE.

Crested Butte is known as "the last great Colorado ski town," but it's still pretty great after the slopes have closed for the season—and a visit during the summer reveals a place as adrenaline-pumping as first tracks in fresh powder. A former coal-mining town, it's a half-hour drive from the closest airport (in Gunnison), but it's cheaper to fly into Denver, which is roughly a four-hour drive through some seriously beautiful scenery.

If Earth laughs in flowers, Crested Butte has her in hysterics. Dubbed "the Wildflower Capital of Colorado," the town is surrounded by meadows that are carpeted in a riot of color beginning in mid-June, and mountainsides awash in purple and yellow beggar description. The Crested Butte Wildflower Festival, which takes place during the second week of July, features hikes, lectures, gardening demonstrations, and painting and photography classes, all focused on this astonishing natural spectacle.

Another way to see it is simply to go for a hike. The hiking trails are superbly marked and maintained, but challenging, especially for anyone sensitive to altitude—the town sits at 9,000 feet. Getting into the mountains is less strenuous on horseback, and outfitters like Fantasy Ranch can take you on an overnight pack trip through the Maroon Bells and over to Aspen, or on a half-day ride up to a mountain pass called Oh-Be-Joyful. (Depending on whom you listen to, it's named after either a hymn or a hooker.)

Another popular sport is 4x4ing, and Bostonians used to city driving will especially appreciate the heart-pumping lunacy of drivers like Joe Webber of Crested Butte 4x4 Expeditions, whose tricked-out, steel-reinforced Toyota FJ brought us through a treacherous pass to a waterfall appropriately known as the Devil's Punchbowl, down a precipitous ravine and into the town of Crystal. Unchanged since the early 20th century, it's inhabited only in summer, and a Google image search is all it takes to see that the old mill is reason enough to visit. Returning to Crested Butte, we drove through Kebler Pass, home to one of the world's largest Aspen groves—and therefore one of the largest living organisms on earth.

However, the activity most closely associated with Crested Butte in the summer is emphatically mountain biking. The town claims to have invented the sport, and even beyond June's Bike Week, it seems as if there are as many people roaming the streets wearing bike shorts and carrying helmets as there are tourists with cameras and ice cream cones.

During ski season, it might be more convenient to stay on the mountain, but the Inn at Crested Butte offers better proximity to the heart of town, a candy-colored conglomeration of Victorian storefronts and bungalows centered on the main street, Elk Avenue. There, the authenticity of an old Rocky Mountain mining town mingles with an artsy, neo-bohemian sensibility expressed in the colorfully painted facades and benches made from classic car parts. Its culinary scene is surprisingly cosmopolitan. Yes, you can find chicken-fried steak, elk and buffalo, but a restaurant called Ryce serves exquisite Chinese food, while Bacchanale is like a quick trip to Italy. The Princess Wine Bar offers an impressive array of wines by the bottle or glass, and both the decor and the sushi are superior at Lil's. No less an authority than The New York Times has praised the pizza at Secret Stash, and you'll find yourself wanting to return for breakfast at Izzy's—but for a faster option, the Gâteau Fab Bakery offers pastries as delicious as any Parisian patisserie.

In the end, though, like anywhere, Crested Butte gets its charm from its people. An eclectic mix of unreconstructed hippies, overachieving adrenaline junkies, avid outdoorsmen, iconoclasts and nature lovers, the town of 1,500 is surprisingly welcoming to the constant stream of out-of-towners in search of outdoor thrills. Within 48 hours, we were befriended by two or three locals, and by the last day, others recognized us on the street and greeted us by name.

In short, there's a Shangri-La-like quality to Crested Butte that makes it easy to understand why most of the people we met told us a version of the same story: "I came out here to [_____] and I just never left." ◆

DEPTH CHARGE

A SUBTERRANEAN SOUTH END RESTAURANT GETS REVITALIZED.

WINK & NOD
3 Appleton St., Boston
(617-482-0117)

ACROSS THE NATION, SPEAKEASY-STYLE bars are a trend that won't quit. Squirreled away behind moving bookshelves and employees-only doors, underground watering holes thrive in nearly every major city except Boston, where our hottest spots are in plain sight. So when word started circulating about Wink & Nod's South End opening in March, we expected the self-styled speakeasy to boast at least some of the traits that characterize this bar species elsewhere—a "secret" entrance down an alley, perhaps, or a worn-looking facade.

Instead, we got a press release. And stationed outside the restaurant's Appleton Street entrance—beneath quite-visible signage—is a suited gentleman who greets guests as they arrive. "Welcome to Wink & Nod," he announces. Secrecy, schmecrecy. There might as well have been a strobe light.

But the theme plays out in the decor. A dramatic redesign of the space has erased all signs of Noche, the previous restaurant, replacing the glossy contemporary finishes with moody, vintage-style details like tufted booth seating and a tin ceiling. Crystal chandeliers and low lighting lend the bar an inviting air.

Because Wink & Nod is a partnership with Whisk, a local pop-up restaurant venture from chefs Jeremy Kean and Philip Kruta, food and drink programs operate somewhat independently. The bar side of things is headed up by general manager Curtis McMillan, and the recipes are thoughtful: Almost every juice, tonic and syrup is handmade by the staff, combined in careful proportion to make signature offerings like the Vera Prescott, a Tiki-inspired combo of Cutty Sark Prohibition scotch, house-made ginger ale and pear puree, and the Jennifer ($12), a vodka-based drink with apricot liqueur and honey-hibiscus syrup. (Cocktails are named after screen sirens and other bombshells.)

The locavore menu, designed for sharing, changes with the season. But you can count on signature dishes like the Super Yaki ($32), an assortment of skewered grilled meats presented in a sealed mason jar full of dense white smoke, which releases as your server lifts the lid. It's tender, flavorful and filling, not to mention fun, and worth ordering for a bigger party. Another signature is the black pasta ($26), a nest of handmade squid-ink tagliatelle with an intensely savory tomato-based ragu of baby octopus, cauliflower and miso, which our table devoured at a recent dinner. The supermoist foie gras duck meatballs ($21) didn't last long either. Kalbi short rib ($15), accompanied by foraged mushrooms, petite beets and other Lilliputian veggies, had the soft, even texture of meat cooked sous-vide rather than braised, and was another table favorite.

On the lighter side, kale salad with za'atar spices, preserved lemon and black sesame ($9) had great acidity and crunch. But while oysters with smoked orange mignonette ($18 for six) sounded magnificent, the toppings lent no discernible flavor to the plate. (It also would have been nice if the server or runner had let us know what kind of oysters they were.)

Clearly, Wink & Nod has skill and ambition aplenty. On off nights, though, it feels like the kitchen aspires to more than it can reliably execute, and the products of the bar and kitchen suffer many of the same afflictions. Why call out that the Maude cocktail (sherry, lemon, egg white and rye, $12) will be served in a coupe when it turns up at the table in an Old Fashioned glass? Why take pains to highlight a 62-degree egg—a trendy preparation designed to yield a perfectly runny center—when what arrives is completely cooked through? Why push hard for guests to order the house-made Fresh Twinkie ($8), when the dessert is dry and barely filled?

Luckily, despite lots of disconnect, there's never discord. From the cheerful staffers to the patrons getting rowdy at the bar, everybody's happy at Wink & Nod. Spirits flow freely, and spirits are high. And that is something that's not easy to find. ◆

Q: WHAT DO YOU RECOMMEND FOR SUNSCREEN?

A: I founded SkinHealth in 1999 as a result of my sister dying of melanoma, the most deadly form of skin cancer, at the age of 40. My goal is to help prevent melanoma deaths by providing the best sun protection possible. Subsequently, one of our SkinHealth sunscreens has been selected by Health Magazine as the best in the country!

I am a firm believer in using a physical barrier in sunscreens to shield our skin from damaging radiation. My preference is micronized zinc oxide, which is invisible on the skin and deflects damaging UVA rays. I recommend using a broad spectrum UVA/UVB sunscreen that is at least SPF 30, and contains a minimum of 5% zinc oxide.

At SkinHealth we have created a variety of sunscreens that have a high SPF and contain between 5% to 17% zinc oxide. These are invisible on the skin, water resistant, and unlike many other sunscreens, contain no fragrance and are not greasy-feeling.

Please stop into a SkinHealth Center and select a sunscreen that is right for you, or buy online at: www.shopskinhealth.com.

LEVEL UP

THERE'S A TOM CRUISE FOR ALL TASTES IN THIS SCI-FI SPECTACULAR.

SURE, HE'S PRODUCED AND STARRED IN FOUR Mission: Impossible films, but while he's very good at running—from things, toward things—and looking great while doing it (belying his 51 years), his heart has always beat best being Tom Cruise, Actor.

He made Top Gun and followed it up with The Color of Money. After Mission: Impossible came Magnolia. Valkyrie followed soon after...Tropic Thunder?

Ok, so he does comedy, too. But love him or hate him (or simply find him couch-jumping crazy), he's never had a role quite like Maj. William Cage—and his outrageously entertaining new science-fiction film, Edge of Tomorrow, offers something for everyone.

While director Doug Liman has made hits like The Bourne Identity and Mr. & Mrs. Smith, this easily could have become another high-concept, low-return failure like Jumper. Hell, look at that name: Edge of Tomorrow. If there's any glaring flaw in the film, it's that the movie's producers should have trusted their original title: All You Need Is Kill, the same as the Hiroshi Sakurazaka novel on which it's based. Not to mention that, for a summer tentpole that's not based on a video game, it certainly evokes the mechanics of a game like Gears of War more than anything before it—and I don't mean this as an insult.

While actual video game-derived movies have consistently failed, Liman's latest perfectly captures the experience of playing a game. Cage is literally dropped into battle, like a freshly created avatar inside a world war that's been raging for years. News reports under the opening credits inform us that a meteor struck Germany, millions died and an alien threat emerged: the fast-moving, squid-like Mimics. So far, so video game.

An opening scene posits Cage in a meeting at the London office of Gen. Brigham (Brendan Gleeson), leader of the United Defense Force, where we learn that Cage has no combat training. He might be a major in the UDF, but he was the owner of an advertising agency when the world went to hell. Out of business, he became the head of army media relations.

Brigham informs Cage that he's to be embedded with a camera crew during this war's D-Day, surrounded by thousands of soldiers wearing "Jackets," clunky-looking but powerful exoskeletons that boost combatants' fighting abilities, speed and agility. Amusingly, the assault will take place on the beaches of Normandy, with the Jacket-wearing grunts hoping for final victory against the Mimics.

Liman's latest perfectly captures the experience of playing a game.

EDGE OF TOMORROW ★★★★

Starring Tom Cruise, Emily Blunt, Bill Paxton, Jonas Armstrong, Tony Way, Kick Gurry, Franz Drameh, Dragomir Mrsic, Charlotte Riley, Masayoshi Haneda, Terence Maynard, Noah Taylor and Brendan Gleeson. Screenplay by Christopher McQuarrie, Jez Butterworth and John-Henry Butterworth, based on the novel All You Need Is Kill by Hiroshi Sakurazaka. Directed by Doug Liman. At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.

Cage flashes that Tom Cruise smile while refusing the direct order of Brigham, who tells Cage he's free to go. But the second that Cage sets foot outside the office, the general orders some nearby MPs to "arrest this man." So, what's Cage to do? Why, burst into that famous Tom Cruise Run!

And then get tasered.

Waking up in the barracks of a massive airfield, he's informed by Master Sgt. Farell (Bill Paxton in one of the movie's many just right casting choices) that he's been reduced in rank to private and that he's to be "combat ready by morning."

If by "combat ready" Farell meant a sweaty, terrified mess whose legs would probably buckle if not for the metal Jacket supporting them, and who can't figure out how to turn off his arm-mounted gun's safety setting, then Cage passes muster.

The ensuing battle is a complete slaughter. The Mimics knew this "surprise" attack was coming, and within minutes of this tremendously well-staged sequence (the first of many), Cage is dead.

And then he wakes up in the barracks of a massive airfield, informed by Farell that he's to be combat ready by morning.

I'll note the film's tagline here: "Live. Die. Repeat."

Déjà vu equals death; we discover that Cage is trapped within the plot of Groundhog Day, only unlike Bill Murray's Phil Connors, the different variations on the day always end with him dying in an inventively excruciating manner—mining nearly as many laughs as you'd find in Murray's classic comedy.

During one of his battlefield failures, he encounters the legendary "Full Metal Bitch," Rita Vrataski (a chiseled Emily Blunt), who tells him to "come find me when you wake up," resigning herself to imminent doom.

Things only get more interesting—and clever—from here.

The video game trope of repeating actions until you're able to proceed a little... bit... further amazingly never grows stale; the variations remain fresh, and there's a real mystery to what's happening, one you feel like you're solving alongside Cage and Vrataski.

Fans of Cruise will eat this up, while those who aren't will also delight as the man who never wanted to be an action hero dives into the role of a coward, with haters rewarded with the chance to watch the actor die countless times, in hilarious ways befitting the best of Wile E. Coyote and his encounters with Acme's finest anvils.

Don't be surprised if you find yourself buying a ticket all over again after the movie is over. I'll see you back in line. ◆

FUNKY FLOCK

NEW YORK SINGER SPINS FAMILY'S ROOTS INTO HARD-TOURING PARTY BAND.

Growing up in the Catskills, north of New York City, Arleigh Kincheloe began singing with her parents' blues-rock band when she was 9 years old. "I was learning the ropes all the while," says the singer, now 27. "It was pretty clear from an early age that this was what I was put here to do." By age 18, she'd started writing songs and hosting house concerts.

"Our house was like the party house," Kincheloe says. "Everybody was always there. I was having people over to eat, drink, be merry and play music... looking back, it was kind of me running the show and playing the songs that I'd written or liked, and we'd all join in."

Kincheloe's still running the show, only at rock clubs across the country as the head of Sister Sparrow & the Dirty Birds, inspiring people to join in the merry groove of the Brooklyn septet's brassy soul-funk.

"It's definitely a party, and people come out for that experience," says Kincheloe, whose band rolls into the Sinclair on June 21. "That's exactly my goal, to create a space for everyone to have a good time."

The same goes for the band, now that Sister Sparrow & the Dirty Birds have played about 150 shows a year on tour since 2011. "It makes the music tighter because we can anticipate each other's emotions and reactions, and that's really exciting to translate to the music," she says. "We were strangers when we started, and now we're family."

Actually, part family from the start, as Kincheloe drafted her older brother Jackson (harmonica) and cousin Bram (drums) to start a band when she moved to New York several years ago. She was influenced by music she'd heard at home in the Catskills (where she still returns to write), like the Band, Bonnie Raitt and Little Feat, inspirations since updated to include the Tedeschi/Trucks Band and New Orleans brass bands.

"I definitely wanted a big band," she says, "and I knew I wanted a horn section, which is ambitious." Aided by Bram's experience and contacts on the New York circuit, they rounded up a crew that now includes bassist Josh Myers, Berklee-schooled guitarist Sasha Brown, tenor and baritone saxophonist Brian Graham and trumpeter Phil Rodriguez. They cut their teeth during a weekly residency at the Rockwood Music Hall on the Lower East Side. "That's how we became a band," Kincheloe says. "It took away the stress of finding another gig."

"Inspiration comes from hardship, not from your happy-go-lucky days."

Sister Sparrow & the Dirty Birds don't have to worry about that now, playing festivals from Bonnaroo to Telluride and jamming with bands like Gov't Mule, though touring can be stressful by nature. "It's a lot of personalities, a lot of mouths to feed, and it's not a lot of hotel rooms," she says. "It's insane, but now that we're returning the second or third time to a lot of places, it's like 'I remember this town; I remember where to go get the good coffee.' It does get easier because you get more familiar with it."

The band has released two albums in addition to last fall's punchy four-song EP, Fight, which shifts from the jazzy syncopation of "The Long Way" to its torchy title track. That record was produced by Randy Jackson, best known as a longtime American Idol judge, though he's also played bass with artists from Jean-Luc Ponty to Mariah Carey. "He's all about the vibe," Kincheloe says. "He really didn't want to mess with it too much, which was cool."

Indeed, Sister Sparrow's heartbreak-tinged songs ("Inspiration comes from hardship, not from your happy-go-lucky days," she says) truly take flight onstage, where the diminutive Kincheloe reigns as a throaty dynamo who also knows how to work the crowd with her sensual moves.

"It's my own personality, and if there's sex appeal there, then cool, I think. But really my goal is just to be true to myself," Kincheloe says. "If you look at YouTube, the first few years I was performing at Rockwood, I was wearing high heels and I was a lot more dolled up than I get now. Nowadays, I'm in my boots and my jeans, and I'm throwing down, and that's how I would rather play my part." ◆

CROSS WIRES

SOMETIMES IT WOULD BE A RELIEF TO COMPLETELY UNPLUG FOR A WHILE.

One morning last month, my Keurig one-cup coffee maker blew up, spewing grounds all over the kitchen floor. This happened right after a night when I was unable to find the channel for some show I wanted to see on the bedroom TV. Almost everything on cable is hidden on channel numbers you've never tried, and you can't call anyone out of your district for help, because different areas of Boston have different channel locations. A book, anyone? I called my lawyer for some comic relief and a sympathetic ear. "Why don't you just shoot yourself?" he said.

Even if you embrace the digital age with all of your being, I know there are times when you curse the things that don't work. My daily adventures with helplessness, I hope, will make you all feel better about your own. I'm not going to complain about the multiple passwords we're forced to have, or the impossibility of taking time off from work to meet service people at home. As I spout off here, my television has been sick for weeks. I turn it on; it's pitiful, no sound. Turn it off, fiddle and diddle, turn it back on: all sound, no picture. Turn it off again, then on, and eureka: sound and picture. Only it's locked onto Home Shopping Network—no other channels.

My sound system for radio and CDs has been out for several months. To listen to CDs, I use my car. I have a Bose radio in my bedroom as an alarm clock. Once a week, with no warning, it stops working. I pull the plug, wait a few seconds and plug it in again. Then it works, and, wonder of wonders, it flashes the correct time. How does it know? Of course, on mornings I'm flying out of Boston it always fails me, so I automatically wake up hours before I have to leave for the airport.

TECHNO-FURY: Dependence on gadgets isn't all it's cracked up to be.

Even outside the home, there are challenges galore. In the gym where I work out, located in a hotel, there is a scale in the locker room. The scale is digital, perfect for the digital world in which machines can implode at any moment. On the face of the scale, it says, "Press here," right in the middle. Of course, you have to kneel down to press it with your hand. As the zeroes appear, it commands you: "Step on.'" But every time I pressed, the screen would read "Error." I would repeat the process, bending down, pressing, a dozen times. "Error" mocked me, every time. I complained to the bored attendant outside the locker room. "Oh," he said, "you got to put it on an even surface."

I went to the lobby and spoke to the concierge. "Why don't you get an old-fashioned scale, where you stand on it and move the weights, rather than an annoying scale that doesn't work?"

"The hotel prizes itself on design, not the past," he told me. I'll take the past over the future I foresee, anytime.

On the road, it's the same, but that didn't get me off the hook in Providence, where the cops whistled me to a stop outside of a strip club on the East Side because I could not find the entrance to I-195 East. I visited my son there and left after an overnight, heading east to New Bedford. Or wanting to head east. Signs would lead me to where I could see the highway, but never to an access road. "Is this what hell is going to be like?" I thought. I called my son after the cop left. "I can't find I-195," I told him.

I'll take the past over the future I foresee, anytime.

"Where are you?" he said.

"In front of a strip joint, next to a lot full of trucks."

"I know where you are," he said.

How did he know? And what did he think I was doing? When my son showed up, he said, "Did you ever hear the acronym 'GPS,' Dad?"

"I forgot my password," I told him.

He put me on the road to perdition then, I'm sure, thinking, "My sibs and I are not going to be able to handle this. Dad's losing it."

"No, I'm not," I would say. "I've always been like this."

When I come home after a night on the town, I have a sense that every electronic gadget has been waiting for me. In my absence they've had plenty of time to fine-tune their plots against me. And maybe they've infected the others, like the smoke alarms that have been primed to go off at 3 am, in the middle of my REM dreams of being dragged back into the army.

But I turn on the TV and find a sports network. I see several ads for erectile-dysfunction meds that list potential side effects, all horrible. Maybe I'll take my chances with the alarm clock and other gadgets. At least they probably can't kill me. And if the pills were so great, wouldn't you want to share one bathtub, not two?

It all makes me think of the three scariest words I know: Some assembly required. ◆

REDNECK REVELS

ON NASCAR'S INFIELD, BE PREPARED TO LOSE YOUR SHIRT AND YOUR DIGNITY.

"I THINK THE GUY WITH THE MUSTACHE IS gonna kill you if you spit out the moonshine," says my buddy Millman. We're on the infield of the Coca-Cola 600 NASCAR race in Charlotte, North Carolina, and I've just ingested a mouthful of firewater proffered in a well-traveled Mountain Dew bottle. I contemplate covertly jettisoning some of it behind a nearby porta-potty, but suddenly find myself surrounded by a trio of sunburned fellows who'd be very upset if I wasted their choice hooch. So I knock it down with a grimace and a holler, high-five everyone and run away before they can hand me anything else.

The running is tough, both due to the moonshine and the fact that it's 90 degrees and I'm wearing a full NASCAR race suit that I bought on eBay. It's quite warm inside the State Fair Corn Dogs/Little Debbie/Pontiac race suit.

I came here, along with a couple of friends from the Union, to conduct anthropological research on customs among discrete tribes of southeastern natives, with a particular focus on how improvised dwellings facilitate an annual nomadic migration to a culturally significant site. To put it another way, we wanted to do shots with a bunch of crazy rednecks camped out on the Charlotte infield.

From the moment we arrive, everyone we encounter is incredibly friendly, offering moonshine and inviting us to try carny-style games like the ol' ring-on-a-string swing. The lone bit of tension arises from our immediate neighbors, an older couple with an expensive RV who don't seem exactly thrilled to find the likes of us in their neighborhood. I detect a hint of passive aggressiveness early on, when the lady next door calls me out for grilling with no shirt.

FAST TIMES: On the infield of a NASCAR race, just about anything goes.

"Cooking with no shirt on is against health code regulations," she says. She posits this as a joke, but I can tell that the joke is a thin veneer barely concealing the underlying truth: She doesn't want Shirtless Grill Guy in her RV backyard. Well, too bad. There are too few chances in a man's life to cook meat beside a recreational vehicle, beer in hand and sun upon shoulders. And as far as I can tell, the social mores of polite society get checked at the infield gate. This morning I stood in line for coffee behind a guy with a mohawk and no shirt. At a NASCAR race, a bare torso is considered business casual.

Away from the oasis of civility that is our neighbors, the scene gets amped up in a hurry. Some guy takes me for a ride in a tiny Honda that was shortened to fit in an RV's luggage compartment. It's emblazoned with Dale Earnhardt Jr.'s race car graphics, and he pauses every couple of hundred feet to do burnouts, much to the delight of passers-by. "This thing is a chick magnet!" he declares. "It gets pretty scary at 80 mph." Yes, I would think so.

We make our way toward Redneck Hill, a modest slope on the south end of the infield that's the epicenter for hillbilly shenanigans. So much so, actually, that there's now a big fence around it. Word is that people got to racin' wheelbarrows down the hill, and, surprisingly enough, wheelbarrows and moonshine proved a bad combo. Nearby, a large man with a pierced tongue who offers me a Jell-O shot does not seem to feel that the closure of Redneck Hill is cramping his party game. His truck bears a handwritten sign that reads, "Flash for Shots!" and soon enough a woman saunters by and takes him up on that.

I'd estimate she's in her 60s, although it's certainly possible she's a hard-livin' 45. I only hear about the flash secondhand, because at the time I'm lying in a hammock hung in the bed of a pickup truck. If a guy tells you to try out his truck hammock, you try out his truck hammock. It's spelled out right in the terms of the surrender at Appomattox.

Later stages of our infield tour take us to Couchville, where rows of couches are situated atop scaffolding next to the track wall. Couchville is presided over by Couch Man, who gives me an autographed hat. A redheaded guy on a BMX bike—sans shirt, naturally—rides past and yells to a crowd in a pickup, "Some people have red hair! You don't gotta hate me just 'cause I have no soul!" Later someone throws me a football, and I launch a wicked Hail Mary toward Redneck Hill, probably tearing several important things in my shoulder. But that's a problem for tomorrow. Right now all is right with the world, and the State Fair Pontiac's runnin' real good.

On the walk back to the RV, I see a woman fast asleep on the roof of a Chevy Impala. And that about sums it up. The South shall rise again, but not until noon. ◆

Soroff On / Melissa Etheridge

OPENING HER WINDOW

THE SINGER/SONGWRITER SOUNDS OFF ON BEING OUT IN SHOWBIZ, DREAM DUETS AND JAILHOUSE ROCK.

GRAMMY- AND OSCAR-WINNING SINGER/SONGWRITER Melissa Etheridge will appear with the Boston Pops at Symphony Hall for Berklee Night on June 12 and 13. Born and raised in Leavenworth, Kansas, Etheridge began playing guitar at 8 and attended Berklee College of Music for a year before leaving to pursue her career in Los Angeles. She was discovered by Island Records founder Chris Blackwell while playing at a bar in Long Beach, and her first album was released in 1988, with her first Grammy Award coming five years later. Her star continued to rise with her fourth album, featuring the hits "I'm the Only One" and "Come to My Window," which earned her another Grammy. In 2007, she won an Academy Award for "I Need to Wake Up," the theme song to Al Gore's eco-documentary An Inconvenient Truth. She's become an outspoken advocate for LGBT issues and raised money to fight breast cancer, from which she suffered and recovered. She lives in Los Angeles and married fiancee Linda Wallem in Montecito last month.

JONATHAN SOROFF: You left Berklee after only one year. How did you have the confidence to do that?
MELISSA ETHERIDGE: First of all, coming to Boston from Kansas was a wonderful opportunity...well, frankly going anywhere from Kansas is pretty great. But Boston's such a fantastic college city, and it was a great experience. It was 1979. Berklee was still pretty new then, and I was one of maybe six girls in the whole school. We were way outnumbered, especially in the guitar department. It was hard to get taken seriously, and I was raised to take on the world. I kind of wish I'd stayed longer. I'd undoubtedly be a more accomplished guitar player. But I started playing at a place called Ken's by George, a seafood house down on Boylston. I started playing there five nights a week. I started making money. And then one of my professors came in and didn't recognize me, so I said, "Y'know what? I'm quitting school." I was making a living and supporting myself.

What was the conversation with your management when you came out as a lesbian? Well, it was a funny situation because I was discovered and had been playing for years at lesbian bars in Long Beach, so it's not like I was ever really closeted. I was always out, and it was my bread and butter. My manager at the time said, "Why would I take you out of a situation that's paying your rent?" It was also a great place to learn and hone my craft. All the record companies came to see me there. Did some of them not sign me because I was gay? Maybe. But when Chris Blackwell found me, he didn't care. He just said, "I think the future of rock and roll has a female voice."

So what happened when you hit it big? Well, when we were just about to release my fourth album, there was the whole "What do we do about the gay thing?" Chris Blackwell was like, "Well, who cares, as long as you don't flag wave," which is pretty funny, since I turned out to be a fairly major flag waver. But I did three albums where I sort of changed the pronouns. It was "they" instead of "he" or "she," and I wasn't lying, but I felt like I wasn't really telling the truth, either, so I just said, "This is ridiculous." And on my fourth album, I just came out publicly.

Do you think it's still hard to be out in show business? Sure! Of course. Any of these businesses that have to do with public persona and popularity, you're walking that line. And it's a very personal choice to be public about your sexuality. You have to be comfortable. I find that the ones who had no support or acceptance from their families are the people who are less likely to do it in a public way.

What about sexism? Is there a lot in the music business? There used to be. In the '80s, when we were working on my first album, people would say, "Oh, no. We already have a woman on our playlist." It was like one was all there was room for, and there was an unspoken rule for a long time that you couldn't play two female artists back to back. You might lose listeners or something. So that's definitely changed.

Would you name breast cancer as the worst thing that ever happened to you? Yes, but also the greatest. It was a huge gift in that it was the ultimate reason for me to change my life, and I'm so grateful because I'm happier and healthier than I've ever been. I try to tell people, "Don't wait till cancer brings you there. Change your life now. Look at what you're eating, and the stress, and the way you go through your day and what you're agreeing to in your life, because it will make you sick."

"It's not like I was ever really closeted. I was always out, and it was my bread and butter."

Who's your rock 'n' roll idol? Bruce Springsteen. Big surprise.

Musician you'd most like to do a duet with? Anybody who wants to sing with me. I've already gotten my wish with Bruce Springsteen, but I'd love to sing with Stevie Wonder, Pink, Adele, Snoop Dog...sign me up!

One lyric you wish you'd never written? [Laughs] Well, I think I rhymed fire and desire a few too many times, but otherwise I think I've been pretty good with my lyrics.

Have you ever played at Leavenworth Prison? Yes, I did. In high school, I went there with a variety show that I was in. It was great. A totally captive audience and the largest one I'd ever seen. There are actually a bunch of prisons around there, and I did a lot with them, but I love being able to say, "I spent 18 years in Leavenworth."

Where did you get your sexy growl? [Laughs] It's always been there. Even when I was a kid, I was put in the back of the chorus because my voice was so weird.

Greatest honor or accolade? Awards are funny. I love having the Oscar. That's the biggest dream. But when my 7-year-old says, "I like that song, Mom!" that's the best thing I can hear. ◆

EAT A DOGFISH

BOSTON CHEFS TOUT SUSTAINABLE SEAFOOD AS BOTH RIGHTEOUS AND DELICIOUS.

BY MC SLIM JB • PORTRAITS BY JOHN HUET • FOOD PHOTOGRAPHY BY JILLIAN MEDUGNO

At 7 am on a Tuesday, the sun is shining low on the horizon at Scituate Harbor, and Charles Draghi, chef/owner of Erbaluce, is meeting on the docks with Adam Fuller, head of sales at Snappy Lobster. Fuller, a former Boston chef, is now a purveyor of local lobster, scallops and fish, with a specialty in sustainable species. Snappy's customers include many chefs like Draghi who covet fish and shellfish once considered worthless by-catch to be thrown back. This morning, Draghi is taking delivery not only of the ever-popular Maine lobster, but other species Snappy finds in its traps: bergall, red bass, conger eel and whelks. "One of our boats is going out after the tinker mackerel run today," Fuller says. "Nice," Draghi replies. "You know I'll want some of that."

As he drives back to Boston, Draghi mulls over how to use today's haul on Erbaluce's daily-changing menu. Having recently fed a preparation of bergall to his servers at a post-service staff meal, he knows they are enthusiastic about it—and able to sell it effectively. "Bergall is a type of wrasse, a local fish that feeds mostly on crustaceans, so its flesh acquires an almost shrimp-like flavor," Draghi explains. "Tonight, I'll fillet it and give it a long saute with some skin and scales left on; the scales add a lovely whole-fish flavor and some Rice Krispies-like crunch. I'll make a silky, almost mayo-like sauce of lobster coral and tomalley in white wine with saffron, fennel, tarragon and crushed pepper, whisked together with red wine vinegar, lemon, sun-dried tomatoes and olive oil flavored with roasted lobster shells. I'll serve it with gigante beans, those big white limas, and some fresh dandelion leaves on the side." Right before service, Draghi will prime his waitstaff with a few sound bites on the fish, and why the shellfish-based sauce pairs well with it. It will be one of the biggest sellers of the night, and the fact that bergall is a sustainable species, as good for the health of our local fisheries as it is tasty, will rarely come up in the customers' questions about it. »

"OF THE 350-PLUS FOOD FISH SPECIES IN NEW ENGLAND WATERS, MANY OF THE MOST SUSTAINABLE AND LEAST UTILIZED ARE THE MOST DELICIOUS."

— Charles Draghi, Erbaluce

WHELK-OME ADDITION:

Yet it's hard to be a restaurant patron in 2014 and be unaware of the seafood sustainability movement. Menus and press releases routinely crow about how chefs are carefully sourcing fish and shellfish with the health of our environment in mind. Eighty percent of Americans say sustainability is a priority when they purchase food, and New Englanders have particularly compelling reasons to be attuned to the issue. Regulators have imposed quotas on catches to keep stocks of popular local species from being dangerously depleted. We've seen the Atlantic cod, sacred symbol of Boston and the commonwealth, get far scarcer and costlier as its once-teeming North Atlantic fisheries have collapsed, while the recent season for harvesting the delectable Northern shrimp from the Gulf of Maine was cancelled altogether. The more adventurous eaters among us have warmed to the introduction of novel choices: Even if we're not sure what tautog is, if it's local and our favorite chefs are cooking it, it's got to be delicious, right?

But the question of whether you can order (or afford) your favorite local fish or crustacean is tied to more momentous issues, including increasing threats from climate change. Effects such as ocean warming and ocean acidification are wreaking havoc on intricately interdependent marine ecosystems in ways that scientists are only beginning to understand. This literal sea change has greatly raised the sustainability stakes: The issue is no longer simply about saving some scrod for your grandkids to enjoy, but ensuring the survival of all marine species and the fishing industries that depend on them.

Draghi and six other local chefs, all admired both for their skill in preparing seafood and their commitment to sustainability, shared their views from the trenches. They offered fascinating and diverse insights into how restaurateurs, distributors, regulators, aquaculturists, processors and fishermen are contributing to the movement—and what you as a consumer can do to help.

WHAT'S ON THE PLATE

Boston restaurants certainly don't lack options for sustainable seafood: There's a dazzling number of species with a variety of appealing flavors and textures. Samuel Monsour, who recently left jm Curley for new projects (including the current pop-up series "The Future of Junk Food"), prefers affordable day-boat fish caught via low-impact methods, including pollock, dogfish, haddock and bluefish, turning them into bar snacks like salted croquettes, smoked rillettes and mousseline-based fishcakes. Jeremy Sewall's three restaurants—Lineage, Island Creek Oyster Bar and Row 34—are doing well with tilefish, hake, weakfish and mackerel; he also takes advantage of the increasing availability of novel cuts like monkfish cheeks.

At Erbaluce, Draghi likewise goes nose-to-tailfin: "I love to use flounder and bass roes, salmon and striper bellies, fish cheeks and monkfish livers." But he leads his sustainability pitch to customers with an appeal to their senses. "Of the 350-plus food fish species in New England waters, many of the most sustainable and least utilized are the most delicious," Draghi says. "Razor clams are more delicate, sweeter and tastier than quahogs. Tautog, sheepshead, red drum, croaker, triggerfish, weakfish and hake are all much nicer on the plate than cod."

Meanwhile, Michael Scelfo serves oily fish like young mackerel cooked on the plancha to his customers at Alden & Harlow; he also uses tilefish, dogfish and skate cheeks. At Hungry Mother, Barry Maiden features redfish, scup, wild blue catfish, tautog and sheepshead. And at Sarma, Cassie Piuma likes to use the underappreciated squid, once derided as bait, by preparing it as saganaki, a Greek stew with onions, fennel, tomato, ouzo and feta.

One surprising aspect of sustainability is that it encompasses not only protecting popular fish and emphasizing underused ones, but also shrinking the ranks of harmful species. While Michael Leviton's customers at Lumière have taken to his preparation of porgy, and his smoked redfish at Area Four is a big seller, he also ardently promotes consumption of spiny dogfish, a suspect in declining cod populations. "Dogfish is cheap and delicious when processed properly, and has practically become an invasive species," Leviton says. "If we're going to successfully reduce its numbers, we'll need more processing plants than the two New England currently has." Similarly, Draghi is happy to use the invasive European green crab: "Cooking them helps out local fisheries, frees up space in traps for more lobsters and makes a beautiful soup, among other dishes. In this case, the virtue is in trying to eat them into regional extinction."

But cautionary tales from recent history complicate efforts to find alternatives to overfished species. "We need to be wary of turning today's unloved fish into tomorrow's endangered species," says Leviton, who currently serves as the board chair of Chefs Collaborative, a national pro-sustainability nonprofit. "Gilbert Le Coze [founding chef/owner of legendary Manhattan seafood palace Le Bernardin] pioneered the use of monkfish, creating a vogue for it in the early '90s. The sudden spike in demand quickly got it red-listed, and it took monkfish stocks 20 years to recover. The popularity of once-shunned fish like skate and Chilean sea bass have caused similar problems in some fisheries. We need to make sure we don't make the same mistakes with porgy, rose fish and the like." That's why Leviton and other sustainability advocates are calling for greater government funding for scientific research on the numbers and resilience of lesser-known species and former by-catch stocks, research commonly devoted to more popular species.

CASSIE PIUMA

MICHAEL LEVITON

WHAT'S ON THE MENU

While the dining public seems increasingly open to trying new species, some customers still balk at options outside their comfort zone of cod, shrimp, salmon, lobster, oysters, scallops and swordfish. And unfamiliar names—or downright unattractive ones—can make sustainable choices a tough sell. Simply relabeling fish to something that sounds tastier or more familiar can expose a chef to charges of deception, of putting a cheap fish in a fancy wrapper to justify a higher price. A famous recent example is the criticism that Boston celebrity chef Ming Tsai endured for describing sablefish as butterfish. His defenders note that butterfish is one of many vernacular names for sablefish, but the Food and Drug Administration states that it isn't a market name sanctioned for retail use.

One clear option for eliminating such ambiguity, the use of scientific names, isn't necessarily attractive, either. Dogfish isn't the sexiest label to begin with; who would order Squalus acanthias? Draghi has found one solution in the loveliness of the Italian language. "Erbaluce's customers expect and welcome novel ingredients, so I mostly use the common names, however unfamiliar. The exceptions are when I don't want my customers to confuse a great species with a similarly named but mediocre relative," he explains. "The delicious long hake could be unfairly mistaken for the kind of dull hake species used for fish sticks, so I use its Italian name, nasello. The sheepshead is fantastic, but I don't want it to be confused with cheaper cousins in the sea-bream family like scup, so it's on my menu as mormora."

A trick that Maiden uses to entice customers into trying lesser-known species is plating porgy in a seafood pan roast entree alongside shrimp and mussels. Piuma does a show-and-sell, using meze specials—small plates that are offered around the dining room on trays like dim sum—to showcase hake and pollock. Their visual and aromatic appeal often succeeds in prompting experimentation where mere menu descriptions might not. "Most of our customers are surprisingly open-minded and willing to try new things upon the suggestion of a well-informed server," she adds. "We spend a lot of time educating our staff."

Indeed, chefs across the board agree that staff training and tasting, as at Draghi's staff meals, are essential. When servers can evocatively describe a dish's flavor and texture, it flies out of the kitchen. Telling the story of where it came from, why and when the chef chose it is also important, Leviton says. "Americans are unfortunately divorced from the notion of how our food is raised, harvested and caught, and we're inured to cheap, out-of-season food. If I want to sell sustainable seafood and justify its price, I have to highlight my relationships with the fishermen and divers who harvest it, explain why we're offering this one fish from this particular boat and not another, and why now, but not in December."

Not every chef is so explicit on provenance. "I personally have backed off from citing names and farms and fishermen. It's more important to build trust with our audience," Scelfo says. "I believe they can safely assume that I care enough about my sourcing. Of course, we have all of that info available, and our staff is proud and aware."

WHAT THE DINER CAN DO

Some restaurateurs are clearly doing their part, but what can the consumer do to help? "There's a lot of great sustainability information in cookbooks these days," Piuma says. "My favorites include Fish Forever by Paul Johnson, For Cod and Country by Barton Seaver and Good Fish by Becky Selengut. They're all easy to read, informative and down-to-earth."

Many chefs sing the praises of the Monterey Bay Aquarium's Seafood Watch guide to sustainable seafood choices, downloadable as a smartphone app or printable to carry as a wallet card at seafoodwatch.org. "The Monterey Bay guide is terrific and scrupulously researched; it offers consumers very clear recommendations for sustainable choices, focusing on stock levels and the environmental impact of fishing methods," Leviton says. "Ideally, you want customers to weigh other factors in their choices as well—for instance, how they might support their local fishing industry—but it's a great starting point." Maiden agrees about the need to leaven focus on environmental impact with support for local fishermen. "If we don't support the local guys who are making an effort, they will eventually disappear and be supplanted by the kind of big conglomerates that have far less concern for sustainability."

Sewall also offers a word of caution. "The pocket guides are great references, but not always easy to use," he says. "Monterey says this about cod: Best Choice: Atlantic (imported hook-and-line); Good Alternative: Atlantic (Georges Bank troll/pole and imported); Avoid: Atlantic (Canada & U.S.). If you are sitting at a restaurant and see cod on the menu, how do you know for sure where it is from, or more importantly, how it was caught? The people selling it to you might not know for sure, and [the purveyors] they bought it from may not know either."

Scelfo adds, "Customers simply need to order and buy the lesser-known fish we're offering. The more we sell, the more we can drive awareness. You should also go to your local fish market and talk to mongers about what they are selling, what's being caught, and buy those items as they're in season." Draghi likewise suggests going straight to the source: "It doesn't take a trip to a fishing pier to meet fishermen anymore." He points to Community Supported Fisheries (CSF) stands at farmers markets, adding, "Many fishing vessels have websites showing what they're bringing in and how to get that fish in stores or delivered."

Ultimately though, Monsour places the onus on chefs to source conscientiously, regardless of how engaged diners are on the issue. "It's our job to offer selections that promote sustainable fishing practices, even for species as commonplace as salmon. Chefs usually think wild-caught salmon is superior, but not every customer is willing to pay the premium for Pacific king or sockeye." Monsour suggests that if chefs instead offer farmed Atlantic salmon, which is farmed in myriad ways, some more sustainable than others, they have to ask tough questions about methodology, feed and so on. "At most, customers might ask where a fish is from and whether it's farmed or wild. It's more the chef's responsibility to pay attention and to care. If you're feeding thousands of people per week with consciously sourced products, that's going to have a substantial sustainability impact."

Seafood sustainability demands that chefs and consumers alike make difficult choices among sometimes-competing goals of affordability, consumer choice, restoration of depleted fisheries, the health effects of what we eat and support for the livelihoods of local fishermen. Leviton offers a sobering but hopeful view. "I don't think it's an overstatement to assert that our food system has profound problems, and that we have an enormous amount of work to do. I'm looking forward to the day when more customers are actively mindful of all the pillars of sustainability: not just environmental impacts, but also economic and social justice for all participants in our food supply chain, and the health implications of what we choose to eat," he says. "Thinking this way rarely yields simple black-and-white answers—supporting sustainability will always involve weighing multiple complex variables. But if we at least start taking baby steps, and help our friends and customers to toddle, too, that will make it easier for everyone to eventually get up the path." ◆

"WE NEED TO BE WARY OF TURNING TODAY'S UNLOVED FISH INTO TOMORROW'S ENDANGERED SPECIES."

"IF WE DON'T SUPPORT THE LOCAL GUYS WHO ARE MAKING AN EFFORT, THEY WILL EVENTUALLY DISAPPEAR."

Hamachi

LIQUID ART HOUSE

Rachel Klein proved her artistry in the kitchen at the Mandarin Oriental. With a new canvas at Liquid Art House, she's in full mastery of her medium—as shown by this swathe of pale hamachi with a curl of compressed green papaya and paintbrush dabs of black garlic. "I'm cooking for myself," she says. "But I think it will resonate with people."

The dish was originally conceived as a sea bass crudo, but imported Japanese hamachi proved more economical and brighter on the palate. The quick-pickled papaya is a clean base for the fish, while smoked lemon and cilantro hoist it with citrus notes. Ginger gives it snap. The effect is light and impressionistic, but you should also sample the heavier tones of the menu's tuna tartare with pickled shiitakes, or the flagrantly sexy smoked sable with beet and sour cream.

Lamb tartare

BISTRO DU MIDI

Presentation is one of Robert Sisca's many culinary strengths, and this creative use of lamb loin is no exception. Plated on a rectangular slate and accented with pistachio nuts and chives, the diced lamb arrives in a dainty brick, fanned with toast points. Mixed with black truffle, Anjou pear and a vinaigrette of mustard, sherry and red wine vinegars, truffle jus and olive oil, it's the sort of dish that makes people instantly reach for their camera apps.

"It's one of our top sellers," Sisca says. "At first, people were like, they'd never heard of it. Now it's on the tasting menu." Fresh lamb, while hardly gamey, is more aromatic than beef. Combined with the perfume of the truffles, it makes for a lilting and complex dish. Pair it with a glass of Nerello Mascalese from Sicily for proof that raw can taste more nuanced than any grilled chop.

A couple of months after opening his Neapolitan-style eatery, Todd Winer, formerly of the beef-centric Met Restaurant Group, says he never wants to flip another burger. "I love the simplicity of country cuisines," he says. Hence the wood-burning stove at the heart of Pastoral, which turns out everything from pizzas to chicken wings to whole fish.

But one of his most intriguing dishes doesn't use the stove at all—namely this raw fish confection laced with a reduction of Campari. "A lot people have their go-tos of salmon, tuna, mackerel, hamachi. There's an unreasonable prejudice against albacore." The fish's neutrality gets an umami lift from a base of paper-thin mushrooms. Bonito touches it with smoke, while grapefruit, preserved lemon and citrus oil give it a bitter edge. "It's complex, but with simple flavors. Your brain and your tongue understand it immediately."

Tunisian steak tartare

SARMA

Steak tartare is a textural dish—uncooked beef has a mild taste, so the capers, onion and seasonings give it form on the palate, while the raw egg adds unction. Sarma's Cassie Piuma rejects tradition for flavor.

"It's all about the vinaigrette," she says. "It's inspired by a traditional sauce from the Kerkennah Islands off the coast of Tunisia. They're known for their abundant caper bushes." In addition to capers, her sauce uses fresh tomato, red chilies, coriander, caraway and the expected jolts of olive oil, vinegar, parsley, cilantro and lemon. The beef is hand-diced top round, garnished with a pillow of grated soft-boiled egg and harissa pita chips. "It's salty, briny, spicy and acidic, but bright with fresh herbs," Piuma says. "It's got everything covered."

Spring crudités

PURITAN & COMPANY

When Will Gilson opened his Inman Square restaurant, one of the inaugural dishes was buttered radishes on toast. "Then we realized people in Boston don't eat radishes in butter," he says. They do, however, eat crudités with onion dip, so he reinvented it for fine dining. "It's not like you're buying it from Shaw's."

Charring spring onions until they're blackened, he mixes them with house mayonnaise, sour cream and French sheep's milk feta. Then he smears the concoction on a piece of tile and plants it with raw baby turnips, radishes, carrots, sugar snap and snow peas and asparagus. (Sourcing is local, naturally.) Sprinkling the construction with toasted pumpernickel and brown butter, he creates a tiny, edible garden plot. "People dig it," Gilson says. "I want to get people excited about just eating vegetables, so we do Market Mondays, writing the menu based on what's fresh."

Razor clam ceviche

TICO

Sliced razor clams from Island Creek form the base of this wildly flavorful ceviche from Tico executive chef Leo Asaro. "The shellfish isn't super fishy, like salmon," he says. "But it stands out, and you know what you're eating." You couldn't mistake it on sight, either. Jeweled with reds and yellows, the ceviche arrives in three gray razor clam shells roosting in a bed of glittering ice. This is a dish that turns heads.

Says Asaro, "It gets lime juice, diced pineapple, cilantro, pickled red onion," plus Aleppo pepper and pineapple gel for added kick. "It needs to be cold and refreshing, but have spice and acidity. Fresh grated horseradish on top drives it home." It is, indeed, a home run, and the thrumming dinner scene shows diners concur. Asaro's ceviche program also includes scallop, shrimp, salmon and tuna versions, but the clam's the big seller, with the kitchen slicing up to 20 pounds per week.

METRO BOSTON'S COLORFUL GUIDE TO ENTERTAINMENT, CULTURE AND CELEBRATING OUR DIFFERENCES

AGENDA for 6/11–6/24

Shout it OUT loud

Show your colors.

BOSTON IS A PROUD CITY. We're proud of our history, we're proud of our sports, we're proud of our diversity and we're proud of our ability to throw a damn good party. We'll be celebrating those last two points of esteem at this year's Boston Pride Parade and Pride Festival, the culmination of a week of colorful, jubilant festivities in the name of love and equality (and beer—don't forget beer). The 44th annual parade kicks off June 14 in Copley Square and marches to City Hall Plaza for the big fest, where revelers will enjoy live musie, a beer and wine garden, food from area restaurants and more. Those who want to keep the pride party going ean head to post-fest danee parties at Underbar, Maehine or the House of Blues. And if you've got the stamina (and we know you do), wrap up this year's Pride Week the next afternoon at a bloek party in JP or Baek Bay and one last blowout at Royale. / Alexandra Cavallo

WHAT ABOUT BOB?

Anyone who's seen Bob Saget's bit in The Aristocrats knows that the comedian and actor can tell a mean dirty joke. And anyone who's seen Saget perform standup (hell, anyone who's seen Saget do just about anything) knows that the man's real-life persona could not be further from that of his Full House character, Danny Tanner, the uptight, clean-freak patriarch of the family. Saget's standup material is anything but clean—the longtime comic specializes in a particularly bawdy brand of humor that, while often offensive, is also downright hilarious. Touring in support of his new memoir Dirty Daddy (probably what the Olsen twins called him behind his back on set), Saget drops by the Wilbur Theatre on June 21 for what is sure to be a decidedly un-family-friendly performance. / Alexandra Cavallo

GLITTER, SWEAT AND TEARS

Can't afford a trip to New York to see Neil Patrick Harris star in the raved-about Broadway revival of Hedwig and the Angry Inch? The Coolidge Corner Theatre has the next best thing: a screening of John Cameron Mitchell's film adaptation of his 1998 off-Broadway play. True to the stage production, the film tells the tale of Hansel, an East German boy with an affinity for rock music and his mother's clothing, who dreams of escaping his Communist homeland for fame and fortune. Years later, after enduring a botched sex-change operation, Hansel-turned-Hedwig fights for love, music and her identity as she leads her rock band on a cross-country tour of America, telling her life story to audiences in dives and diners as she follows a former flame who found rock stardom by using her songs. The riotously entertaining—and moving—cult film hits the Coolidge on June 16. / Julianne McShane

Reviews by Brett Michel

The Amazing Spider-Man 2 ★½ After helming only two Spider-Man movies, Marc Webb has accomplished what took Sam Raimi three tries to achieve with his 2002-07 trilogy: He's made a truly awful film. Nevertheless, Andrew Garfield's fidgety nerd suits ol' web-head's alter ego, Peter Parker, and his Spidey perfectly embodies the cocky, quippy character known to readers of the Marvel comic—something Tobey Maguire never quite nailed. Likewise, Emma Stone's Gwen Stacy is a far more appealing love interest than Kirsten Dunst's Mary Jane Watson, and no upside-down kiss is needed to sell Garfield and Stone's chemistry. Refinements in visual effects have put Webb in charge of a Spider-Man who looks utterly believable, not weightless like Maguire's clearly CGI stand-in. Alas, the poster for The Amazing Spider-Man 2 promises that "his greatest battle begins," and although the sight of our hero swinging between Manhattan skyscrapers in stereoscopic 3-D truly is amazing, his battle is obviously a corporate one; Sony envisions churning out more sequels, plus spinoffs featuring classic Spider-Foes, to help keep its business afloat. It's a nasty enterprise, and this film sinks under the weight. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Belle ★★★ Director Amma Asante's second feature is inspired by the story of Dido Elizabeth Belle (a luminous Gugu Mbatha-Raw), the mixed-race daughter of Capt. Sir John Lindsay (Matthew Goode in a cameo). Despite being illegitimate, she's raised in a loving household by her aristocratic great-uncle Lord Mansfield and his wife (Tom Wilkinson and Emily Watson, both in fine form), yet the darkness of her skin prevents her from fully participating in the traditions of her noble standing. While her white—and also illegitimate—cousin Elizabeth (Sarah Gadon) is readied for marriage, Belle is headed for a life as a wealthy spinster. But as formula dictates, she meets an attractive young idealist, John Davinier (newcomer Sam Reid, in an unfortunate wig), a lowly vicar's son. It's all captured in a candy-colored digital palette that's distressingly become the norm, flying in the face of filmed costume dramas of the past—but then, this is a story driven by change, with Davinier and Belle challenging her great-uncle to do right by his role as lord chief justice, helping bring an end to slavery in England. (At Boston Common, Kendall Square, Coolidge Corner, West Newton and in the suburbs.)

Chef ★★★ This isn't a movie about Jon Favreau. Sure, he wrote, directed and starred in this comedy about a once-hot gourmet chef, Carl Casper, who's in a creative rut. After being called out by his critics, Casper begins serving up delectable Cuban sandwiches from a food truck, winning back favor from customers and critics alike by returning to his roots. Favreau's a filmmaker who impressed with the hit indies Swingers and Made, and then a couple of massive Iron Man movies, before making the joyless critical and commercial failure Cowboys & Aliens. But Chef is a small picture, a tasty concoction in which his simmering acting chops are brought to a boil by 10-year-old Emjay Anthony, who delightfully underplays Casper's son, Percy, as the two bond over the heat of the truck's grill on a cross-country trip. Is Favreau as thin-skinned as Casper, who gets into a very public social media spat with one of his earliest supporters? Who cares, when such big talents as Dustin Hoffman, John Leguizamo, Sofia Vergara, Oliver Platt, Scarlett Johansson and Robert Downey Jr. are along for the ride? (At Boston Common, Fenway, Kendall Square, Somerville and in the suburbs.)

Godzilla ★★½ Sixty years after Ishiro Honda unleashed the H-bomb-spawned "Gojira" on Japanese audiences still reeling from the horrors of Hiroshima, Godzilla once again breathes atomic fire in director Gareth Edwards' crowd-pleasing reboot. But while the scaly sexagenarian glimpsed here is vastly superior to the wrong-headed monster seen in Roland Emmerich's disastrous 1998 reimagining starring Matthew Broderick, at least that version of the Thunder Lizard wasn't reduced to playing a cameo role in his own film. Nevertheless, Edwards' reverential rendition of the King of the Monsters—while larger and created with expensive CGI—is closer in design and temperament to Honda's, which was nothing more than a man inside a rubber suit stomping on miniature reproductions of Tokyo. So it's a shame that Edwards' admirable interpretation relegates everyone's favorite reptile mostly to the shadows. And unfortunately, though the movie's advertising prominently features Bryan Cranston as conspiracy-minded Joe Brody, the Breaking Bad star's character doesn't survive long enough to witness Godzilla's late-film reveal; the real star is Kick-Ass's Aaron Taylor-Johnson as Joe's thinly written son, Ford. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Maleficent ★★ After questionably rebooting Alice in Wonderland as a vehicle for Johnny Depp's Mad Hatter, Disney's at it again, needlessly revisiting Sleeping Beauty in live action from the perspective of Maleficent, who's given high-cheekboned life by Angelina Jolie. Continuing the violent tradition of Disney's live-action misfire The Lone Ranger, screenwriter Linda Woolverton spins a wheel around rape culture, as future king Stefan (Sharlto Copley) revisits the moors where he shared a childhood romance with Maleficent, then a young winged fairy. Returning to the older, lovesick girl, he essentially roofies her. Waking alone, she's horrified to discover that Stefan has clipped her wings. His daughter, Princess Aurora (Elle Fanning) is reduced to a supporting role, but a heavy still has to die, as all irredeemable Disney villains must. Ah, but it's not Maleficent. In this unsettling revision, she's a victim, and her trauma is palpable. Fun for the whole family! (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Submit film listings by fax (617-859-1446), by mail to "Calendar: Movies" or by email to movies@improper.com. Include address, phone number, date, time, price, nearest T stop and a brief description. Deadline is four weeks prior to publication. Listings not accepted over phone.

Million Dollar Arm ★★★ As formulaic baseball pictures go, Disney's Jerry Maguire-like tale of a beleaguered sports agent doesn't quite hit a home run, but it reaches base thanks to a winning script by Thomas McCarthy, who navigates the predictable tropes of the genre like a pro, and Jon Hamm, who uses his gravelly voice to project the world-weariness that his central role requires. As JB Bernstein, the agent who faces stiff competition from bigger-bankrolled competitors, Hamm brings his A-game for director Craig Gillespie, who coaches a team of seasoned actors, including Lake Bell, Bill Paxton, Alan Arkin and Aasif Mandvi, as Bernstein's partner Aash. Mounting an unconventional recruitment strategy, Bernstein travels to untapped India to find cricket players (Slumdog Millionaire's Madhur Mittal and Life of Pi's Suraj Sharma) suited to pitching in the major leagues. Based on a true story, Million Dollar Arm scores a solid triple. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

A Million Ways to Die in the West ★ With a title like A Million Ways to Die in the West, one wishes that director, producer, co-writer and star Seth MacFarlane might have written a painful death for his cowardly character, a sheep farmer named Albert, as penance for having made a spoof this remarkably unfunny. The Family Guy creator has assembled an impressive cast, including Oscar winner Charlize Theron, Amanda Seyfried, Giovanni Ribisi, Sarah Silverman, Neil Patrick Harris and Liam Neeson, who made for a better villain when voicing a character created from LEGO. But then, The LEGO Movie understood Western movie tropes far better than MacFarlane, whose only point of reference for the genre appears to be Back to the Future Part III, which might explain this film's cameo from Christopher Lloyd and a certain DeLorean. Yep, expect a lot of pop culture references in place of punch lines, plus a million ways to kill a joke. If you enjoy fart humor set in the Old West, Mel Brooks' Blazing Saddles just hit home video in a wonderful new 40th anniversary edition—this is just a crappy imitation. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Neighbors ★★ A movie directed by Nicholas Stoller (Forgetting Sarah Marshall), starring Seth Rogen and Rose Byrne? Must be a Judd Apatow production, right? Perhaps, if it ran more than two hours—but this comedy about a couple, their newborn and their war with the frat next door is a scant 96 minutes long. Sounds like a good thing, until you watch it and realize it would elicit more laughs if cut down to, say, trailer length—and, truth be told, the trailer was pretty amusing. So, naturally, the best bits appear in said trailer. Despite a delightful comedic turn by Zac Efron (who knew?) as Teddy Sanders, leader of Delta Psi Beta and tormentor of Mac and Kelly Radner (Rogen and Byrne), aided by Greek brothers Pete (Dave Franco, further distinguishing himself from real-life brother James) and Scoonie (an underutilized, way underdressed Christopher Mintz-Plasse), many setups go nowhere, and what few punch lines exist are obvious and mostly miss their mark. When Rogen's Mac argues that he should be the Kevin James surrogate, another realization hits: He already is. (At Boston Common, Fenway, Somerville and in the suburbs.)

Palo Alto ★★★ What is it with the Coppola women and their attraction to the amoral ennui of overprivileged youth? Sofia examined the alarmingly nonchalant teenagers behind a string of Beverly Hills break-ins in last year's The Bling Ring, and now her 27-year-old niece (and granddaughter of Godfather filmmaker Francis) Gia Coppola makes an assured writing and directing debut adapting James Franco's underwhelming book of short fiction, Palo Alto: Stories. The third-generation filmmaker nevertheless finds some interesting—if not wholly original—hooks to hang her film on, from underaged drinking parties to high school slut-shaming. Emma Roberts (Julia's niece) plays shy, virginal April, and Jack Kilmer (Val's son) is Teddy, an introspective soul under the corrupting influence of his dangerously unpredictable pal, Fred (Nat Wolff). Teddy has eyes for April, but then, so does her soccer coach Mr. B., played by Franco—casting that should sound alternately brilliant and creepy to the actor's Twitter followers. While lacking her granddad's storytelling prowess, Coppola displays visual and aural flair, navigating around any charges of nepotism. Yes, even with the Roberts and Kilmer kids. (At Kendall Square and in the suburbs.)

do that! Her powers only allow her to phase herself and others through objects, not through the decades! Plus, in the comic books, she's the one who's projected into the past!" Correct, nerdlingers, but as popular as Juno's Ellen Page may be (she reprises her role as Pryde in the third X-Men film helmed by Bryan Singer), she ain't this franchise's star. So, Singer sends Hugh Jackman's Wolverine back to 1973, where he must reunite former (and future) friends Professor Charles Xavier and Erik Lehnsherr/Magneto (James McAvoy and Michael Fassbender, portraying younger versions of Patrick Stewart and Ian McKellen's characters). But bringing these bitter frenemies together is just the beginning. The three, aided by Hank McCoy/Beast (Nicholas Hoult) must prevent shapeshifting Mystique (Jennifer Lawrence) from assassinating mutant-phobe scientist Bolivar Trask (Peter Dinklage), an event that would set in motion the end of Homo sapiens and Homo superiors alike. Sound convoluted? It is, but it also makes for one of the better entries among the seven films set in Marvel's mutant universe. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

MUSIC

Edited by Sarah Hagman

GOOD GRIEF Born to blind parents, William Fitzsimmons grew up surrounded by music—his childhood home featured a pipe organ handmade by his dad—but he started his career not as a musician, but as psychotherapist. Now though, he's the one sharing intimate confessions. The singer/songwriter's brand of wistful indie-folk is both stirring and melancholy (think: Damien Rice, Sufjan Stevens), and his lyrics draw upon personal experience, from his parents' divorce to his own. He's expressed plans to take his music in more upbeat directions in the future, but misery will love company when he plays the Sinclair on June 15. / Abagail Sullivan PHOTO: ERIN BROWN

CITY DAZE New York's subway cars and city walls served as Chris "Daze" Ellis' first canvases. The graffiti artist turned painter took his work from the sidewalk to the studio in the '80s, but it still reflects the streets where he got his start. Now he's serving as artist-in-residence at Andover's Addison Gallery of American Art, where his recent large-scale paintings in spray paint, oils and acrylics depict energetic urban scenes like concrete playgrounds and the Coney Island pier. See such works juxtaposed with selections from the Addison's permanent collection, handpicked by Ellis himself, in Street Talk through July. / Hannah Feeney

BOY WONDERS

Dan Mazur and Alexander Danner are the hip history teachers you wish you had in school. The duo's debut, Comics: A Global History, 1968 to the Present, looks beyond the Sunday comic strip to explore every subgenre of the multifaceted medium, from graphic novels grounded in the everyday to fantastical dreamscapes populated by superheroes. More than 250 images from all over the world illustrate the authors' analysis, which shines new light on one of the world's most accessible, but oft-overlooked, art forms. We Salute Boston's Finest Restaurants and Clubs

CENTRAL WHARF CO., the Financial District's newest eatery!

Restaurants

THE BLACK ROSE [160 State Street, Boston, 617-742-2286, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Voted one of America's top ten Irish establishments, The Black Rose is Boston's premier Irish pub and restaurant. Established in 1976, the pub is located in the historic Faneuil Hall/Quincy Market area of Boston, and known far and wide for its convivial atmosphere, good food and live Irish entertainment. The menu features honest, made-from-scratch food including traditional Irish fare, award winning clam chowder, fish and chips, native lobster, aged Black Angus cuts of beef, and of course Mother Sweeney's corned beef – a recipe from Mother Sweeney herself! For thirty years The Black Rose has offered live Irish music seven nights a week. Memorable guests on stage have included members of the Chieftans, flutist James Galway, Tommy Makim, Liam Clancy, John Denver, and a once relatively unknown member of an Irish rock group called U2.

BROWNSTONE [11 Dartmouth Street, Boston, MA, 617-867-4142, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Situated on the border of Back Bay and the South End, Brownstone is named for the style and elegance reflective of the architecture of Boston's two neighborhoods. From the hardwood flooring to the Venetian plaster ceiling, the interior exudes classic warmth with a sleek and intimate bar made of mahogany and granite. Brownstone's menu features small plates with big flavors! It also has one of the best brunches in Back Bay and Monthly Beer and Wine Dinners.

CENTRAL WHARF CO. [160 Milk Street, Boston. 617-451-9460, centralwharf@irishconnection.com] The most recent addition to the Glynn Hospitality Group portfolio, Central Wharf Co. located on Milk Street is the newest hot spot in the financial district. Whether you are coming for dinner or meeting friends for some of our hand crafted cocktails, Central Wharf's welcoming atmosphere is reaffirmed by its gastronomic offerings. With a focus on healthy preparations and locally sourced ingredients, their simple comfort foods concepts are enhanced buy their contemporary accompaniment

HANDS OFF THE BOTTEGA VENETA

"Then why does it still feel like winter?" whined one guest at the Spring Celebration for Youth Villages.

The benefit, held at the Fairmont Copley Plaza, raised beaucoup dinero for kids transitioning out of foster care and drew such movers and shakers as Yvette and Peter Mulderry, relentless party pair Peter and Liz Georgantas, the stalwart Sandy and Paul Edgerley, beneficent benefactors Joanna and Jon Jacobson, Caribbean queen Colette Phillips, the irrepressible Mary Kakas and one person who explained the beef Wellington appetizers to his date as "basically Waspy knishes."

The evening's most amusing fundraising tool: the wine pull, where guests paid $25 to pick a cork from a basket and go home with a corresponding bottle, which prompted one man to say, "I wasn't expecting a Romanée-Conti, but riesling? Really?"

Meanwhile, the evening's most amusing incident: One woman put her purse down to get a closer look at the silent auction, and another woman tried to bid on it.

WHAT EXIT?

The Boston Pops started its season with a bang when snappy, crackling Pops conductor Keith Lockhart led a concert at Symphony Hall that featured Seinfeld alum and Broadway baby Jason Alexander.

Among the Opening Night crowd: aptly named Peabody Award winner Barbara Brilliant and her husband, Erwin, original Bozo Frank Avruch and the perfectly lovely Betty, the absurdly telegenic Ryan Schulteis and his handsome other half, Drew Colleran, broadcasting behemoth Ron Della Chiesa and the light of his life, Joyce, and one woman who kept shushing everyone around her.

The evening's funniest line came from Alexander, who got applause after revealing that he grew up in the Garden State and said, "Really? Boston Strong! New Jersey? Adequate."

THAT'S WHAT FRIENDS ARE FOR

It was a homecoming for Community Servings at its 22nd annual Life Savor gala, which returned to its original venue, the Langham Hotel, for an epic cocktail party followed by dinners at restaurants all over the city.

Present and accounted for: handsome hotelier and the evening's honoree, Serge Denis, with his stunning bride, Jane, B-52s frontman Fred Schneider, board chair Karen Bressler and her handsome husband, Scott Epstein, the impeccable Tony Corey, lovebug Don Sturdy, the incorrigible Shawn McBride with the long-suffering Daron Manoogian, Boston's fairy godfather, Harry Collings, and his silver fox, Dan Moon, the criminally blue-eyed Robbie Gravis and the debonair JJ Milligan, interior design goddess Eileen Patterson and one person who said, "I always come to this party shopping for a husband, but so far, no luck."

To which his friend responded, "You've got a lot of baggage, but someday you'll find someone to carry it."

AIR KISSES ONLY

Conserving the Emerald Necklace is important, but so is preserving your eyeballs. That's why it's advisable to wear large sunglasses to Party in the Park, aka "the hat party," where every kiss on the cheek means the risk of a scratched cornea.

"I always come to this party shopping for a husband, but so far, no luck."

From picture hats and fascinators to cloches and pillboxes, every conceivable type of headgear appeared atop the stylish ensembles in the tent at Pinebank Promontory, overlooking Jamaica Pond.

All the swans were there, as were a handful of peacocks, among them: party founder Wendy Shattuck, co-chairs Cackie Austin, Lynn Dale, Kimberly Furnald, Holly Safford and Camille Valentine, blond beauties Ellie Chu and Courtney Forrester, fashion plate Jcannette Hsu-McSweeney, Gardner Museum head honcha Anne Hawley, Ritzy babe Barbara Lootz, the pretty-in-pink Patricia Marks-Martinovich, the uber-chic Eike Traina and pretty much every other power chick in Boston.

The waiters were liberal with the champagne, lunch was lovely, and the sun was shining, making it a perfect spring afternoon. But that didn't stop one woman from grumbling, "I hate wearing a hat. It takes my hair weeks to recover." ◆

TREND SETTING

IT'S OFTEN SAID THAT FASHION IS CYCLICAL, but rarely so literally as in our Summer Style issue. For our fashion spread, Lydia Santangelo turns to the South Shore, visiting the nearly 90-year-old Paragon Carousel, where our models give the pretty painted horses a run for their money in the season's romantic pastels and florals.

Meanwhile, Renata Certo-Ware profiles the locals behind five recently launched sartorial ventures, from an indie songstress turned fashion forager to a former circus performer who now sells globally influenced garb from a traveling caravan. Alix Childs takes on the jumpsuit, revealing the oft-intimidating piece as a summer staple that can be dressed up and down. Alexandra Cavallo addresses another divisive garment, one that's made headlines in the likes of The Wall Street Journal in recent weeks, tapping local style experts for their take on the short-short, along with less daunting summer trends for men. And Jonathan Soroff catches up with actress Eliza Dushku, who's always had unique style, from the moment she showed up to her very first audition in Boston in a T-shirt and cutoffs, straight from the playground. Of course, she dressed a little differently for our cover shoot, staged at a Liberty Hotel suite overlooking the skyline of the city she once again calls home, but she's still completely comfortable in her skin—a key to killer style, whatever you choose to wear.

It's summer, which means it's time to show a little skin. For men this season, that means showing a little (or a lot!) of leg. One company, Chubbies, exclusively sells men's shorts with a 5½-inch inseam. For those unfamiliar with gentlemen's measurements: That's short. Numerous brands are following suit, so we asked three local experts to weigh in on guy gams, plus more summer trends. / Alexandra Cavallo

Alexander Ingram, blogger at A Boston Blazer

The trend: I would say [it's] good as long as they aren't too short, and if it's done right. It's like any risky fashion trend: There's a big chance you can get it wrong.

How short is too short: I wouldn't go beyond a 5-inch inseam unless you're at the beach.

Pulling them off: First things first: Own it. If you're going to be nervously tugging at them all day, wondering what folks will think, you're going to look unconfident. Second, make sure your shorts fit well. They shouldn't be tight, but they should be tailored to the form of your leg.

Other summer trends on his radar: I'm a big fan of short-sleeved button-down shirts. These have come back in a big way after being reserved for IT departments for the past decade or so. Make sure the shirt is well-tailored to your body. The sleeves should be on the shorter end so they accentuate your arms—even if you haven't been hitting the gym.

Emmi Sorokin, stylist and author of The Business Casual Survival Guide: 30 Looks for Men

The trend: It's a trend that looks flattering on few body types. In all of my years dressing men, I've never once heard a guy ask to show more leg. Trends are not must-follow commandments from the fashion gods... consider what flatters your body and makes you feel completely confident.

How short is too short: An inseam of 7 inches or less.

Pulling them off: Actually pull them off your body entirely. Then pull on a pair of trouser-cut shorts.

Other summer trends on her radar: Printed-trim polos inspired by the '60s; they make a nice alternative to their brand-logo-emblazoned counterparts.

Gary Ritacco, owner of Uniform

The trend: I've always been a fan of shorter shorts. No matter our age, guys' legs tend to stay fit longer than other body parts.

How short is too short: Well, let's just say you don't want your junk hanging out.

Pulling them off: One tip I use for those who are a bit apprehensive: Purchase a pair that are about 1 to 2 inches above the knee, depending on initial comfort level, and you can always cuff them up to make them shorter.

Other summer trends on his radar: Tank tops, tank tops, tank tops! [And] floral prints are still important this year. I've chosen to focus our florals on swim. It's an easier sell.

THE END OF VEGGIE PLANET

A CAMBRIDGE MAINSTAY BOWS OUT.

JUST BEET IT: The Harvard Square restaurant will close its doors this summer.

ADAM PENN, OWNER OF THE DELICIOUS Veggie Planet that shares its space with Club Passim in Harvard Square, found himself with a growing problem. But it had nothing to do with the crops that were the lifeblood of his well-priced vegetarian and vegan fare.

"A couple of years ago, seating capacity was reduced" in the dining room, to comport with a code crackdown, Penn explains. "From 130 people in the room for a sold-out show to 101. Percentage-wise, that's pretty significant. And since the beginning, Passim has had shows every night, so there's no table turnover," he adds. "We're really just covering our fixed costs."

So, after nearly 13 years as a Cambridge standby, Veggie Planet will close later this summer—a victim of circumstance. What Penn would ideally like to do, he says, is find someone to operate the Veggie Planet concept in a new location. "I would love to keep it alive," he says, adding that he'd provide support to "get it up and going." Meanwhile, Penn plans to focus on his second restaurant, the diner Veggie Galaxy in Central Square.

NEW TIP TAP TEAMMATE

CHEF/OWNER BRIAN POE, WHO'S A PRO AT juggling multiple restaurants, has hired Douglas Rodrigues as his new executive chef at The Tip Tap Room. Rodrigues worked with Ken Oringer at Clio before being dismissed last year when he was arrested on assault and battery charges (he's pleaded not guilty). Now returning to the restaurant business, he says his close collaboration with Poe on the new summer menu has been "spontaneous and fun." He adds, "We each bring our own tricks to the table."

Case in point: a strawberry and goat cheese salad that's a regular on the seasonal menu. This year, Rodrigues says they have access to a great angelica from Eva's Garden. Next comes the question: "What if we make a vinaigrette, and burn the [angelica] leaves to roll the goat cheese in, and instead of croutons, we'll make pulled sugar infused with black pepper for crunch?" The answer, friends, is on the menu.

GOOD WOOD: Loretta's aims for an authentic, down-home vibe, reminiscent of a Nashville joint.

COUNTRY CALL

LORETTA'S BRINGS A TOUCH OF NASHVILLE TO LANSDOWNE.

THE COUNTRY MUSIC CRAZE HAS ARRIVED in Boston, and Loretta's Last Call on Lansdowne Street is the latest sign that, yes, we'll all soon walk the line.

The buzz from Jason Aldean's record-setting Fenway Park shows last year dovetailed perfectly with the Lyons Group's plans for the country western bar, slated to open by June's end.

"It was a nice crowd, and everyone was happy," says Chris Williams, operations manager of Loretta's Last Call. "There was a lot of enthusiasm to it. I think that's where we kind of went, 'Hmm.'"

Aldean's country music shows were a first for Fenway Park, and June sees two shows from the Zac Brown Band. If you're keeping score, that's four country shows at the lyric little bandbox in 12 months—after a decade without any. Add 101.7 FM's format change from dance to country, and it's time to pull out those cowboy boots, grab your 10-gallon hat and get dancing. And Loretta's Last Call wants to be the city's go-to for country music.

The decor aims for authenticity, with wood almost everywhere: wood dining tables, hardwood floors, wood paneling on the walls and 150-year-old reclaimed lumber for two communal high-tops and the long bar, which runs along the wall and lends a distinctly different look than the center bar that dominated the space when it was La Verdad. The large patio remains, and photos, neon signs and a U.S. flag cover every inch of wall space, but the focal point is the raised stage. Live music is planned for Thursday, Friday and Saturday to start, with a mix of local and national acts booked by Brian Scully (of local band Dalton and the Sheriffs). And when there's no one onstage, a 45-year-old jukebox from Alabama stands ready to spin records.

"We want it to be authentic. We did a lot of homework, went down to Nashville," Williams says. "We're looking into doing it right, not acts that are used to playing Top 40 coming in and doing country."

Adding to the authenticity is food from executive chef Zak Lindgren, who's planning classic American dishes with a Southern influence. There will be several types of fried chicken, collard greens, catfish fry and ham—at prices that Williams says will be competitive with the neighborhood. The draft selection keeps it simple, with Coors and Bud among the six taps, and the cocktail list will have a few whiskey- and moonshine-based drinks.

While Loretta's Last Call is at the front of the country-music trend, it's at the back end of a trend that's transformed Lansdowne Street from a slew of clubs to a line of bars and live-music joints.

"I've been working in the industry since it was all international student-centric, when it was all about heavy house music and fancy cars and nightclubby nightclubs. It's different; that scene is dying," Williams says. "My friends who are running those types of places, who didn't change gears, are scratching their heads and wondering what to do because they can't get people through the doors."

HOT SHOT

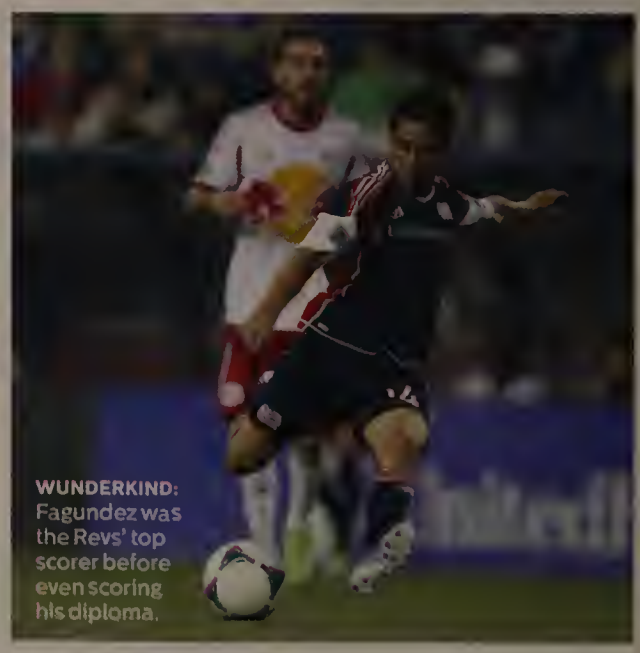
Signed to the New England Revolution at age 15, the now 19-year-old soccer phenom Diego Fagundez recently added another accomplishment to an already impressive list: graduating high school. The midfielder, who finished last season as the team's top goal scorer, returns from the World Cup break when the Revs face Philadelphia Union on June 28. / Sarah Hagman

HAS BEING A PROFESSIONAL ATHLETE AT SUCH A YOUNG AGE TAUGHT YOU ANYTHING THAT YOU WOULDN'T LEARN IN A CLASSROOM? Of course. You need to be responsible. That's one of the things that everyone tells you. You have to be mature enough to play the sport and be around it.... I'm playing against men. You're not going to be out there fooling around.

HAVE ANY TEAMMATES IN PARTICULAR HELPED SHOW YOU THE ROPES? When I first joined it was Shalrie Joseph and Matt Reis. [They] were the two who definitely took me under their wing and made sure that I was doing well. And now I can definitely say Jose Goncalves [has] brought me under his wing too. He's just a great person overall and can teach you a lot about eating, and a lot about taking care of your body.

THERE'S A LOT OF EYES ON SOCCER AT THE MOMENT BECAUSE OF THE WORLD CUP. IS THERE ANYTHING YOU COULD SAY TO SPORTS FANS WHO DON'T FOLLOW SOCCER TO CONVINCE THEM THAT IT'S A SPORT WORTH THEIR ATTENTION? It's a different kind of game. It's a sport that's going to get bigger and bigger, year by year, especially [because of] the World Cup. There are people who don't even know anything about soccer, and suddenly the World Cup comes and you know everything about it. It's a hard game to understand, but once [they] start understanding it, I think they'll enjoy it. I know it's not like football where you're tackling...but it's just a nice, technical sport.

YOU HAVE A PRETTY DISTINCTIVE HAIRSTYLE. DO YOU USE A SPECIAL GEL DURING THE GAMES TO KEEP IT INTACT? I don't use anything special. I use something that you just buy at CVS or Walgreens, anywhere. It's just got to be glued.



WUNDERKIND: Fagundez was the Revs' top scorer before even scoring his diploma.

Are You Among the 85 Percent?

Right now in the U.S., more than 85 percent of all women are wearing the wrong bra size and don't even realize it! Are you part of the 85 percent? I was and didn't even know it, but my time visiting a real "Bra Fit Stylist" made a world of difference and left me with a renewed sense of self-confidence! Here's my story:

The Introduction

My friend first introduced me to Intimacy, a bra retailer with over 15 stores in the U.S. when she asked me if I knew there was an 85 percent chance that I was wearing the wrong bra size. Curious to know if I was part of that statistic, I decided to schedule a Bra Fit Styling appointment online at MyIntimacy.com with their store in Copley Place.

The Bra Fit Specialist

The day of my appointment, I was greeted by the stylists who were in the front of the store upon my arrival. They had me at hello! It's funny how a simple "Hi! Welcome to Intimacy; we will be right with you," was all that was needed to make me feel comfortable.

I was promptly met by Maria Stern, a Bra Fit Stylist that is knowledgeable about every brand and style in the store. Maria was eager to help me find the perfect bra. She lead me through the chic, well-lit and organized boutique to a spacious and comfortable dressing room where we could talk more freely.

We had a conversation regarding my needs and concerns about my current bra situation. The great thing about Intimacy is that their expertly trained Bra Fit Stylists have mastered the art of matching the ideal lingerie to your unique body and style.

Intimacy's renowned Bra Fit Styling service has been touted as "life changing," as many women leave the store feeling both comfortable and beautiful, something they never dreamed to be possible. This is no surprise, since the company's founder Susan Nethero, trained under the Queen of England's Royal Bra Fitter and Intimacy has professionally fit over one million women.

For more information please visit www.MyIntimacy.com

The Collection

After assessing my needs, Maria stepped out briefly and came back with three options for me. "May I?" she asked as she handed me a black, a blue and a red bra. The first bra I tried on fit perfectly, much better than the bra I wore that day and far better quality.

At Intimacy, they carry a unique collection of premium European brands, all of which are fashion-forward and of the highest quality available. Some of these brands include, Marie Jo, Prima Donna, and Andres Sarda to name a few. With 90 sizes to choose from in sizes A to K cup, and including sports bras, panties, shape wear, bathing suits and "bra-wear" items, such as strap extensions and delicate fabricate wash, Intimacy is at the top of its industry. Intimacy leads the intimates fashion business with proprietary research on style, fit and fashion and award-winning commitment to excellent customer service.

After a few test movements to ensure that the fit of the bra was perfect, I couldn't have been more happy. Maria explained to me that the secret to a perfect bra is not only a matter of size, but also style and selecting a color that works well with your skin tone.

I was only a few inches away from my true bra size, but for something that I use on a daily basis, a few inches made a world of difference. When I told her that, she nodded and agreed. "It's just like the perfect jeans or the right shoes," she says. "But many women don't take their bra, the garment that they wear daily and directly on their bodies, as seriously because it is not visible to the outside world." That's a little crazy when you think about it.

As Maria left me to dress, I was overcome by so much happiness. I never thought that bra shopping could be so much fun! I decided to buy three sets and met Maria at the register where she informed me that the average woman's breast shape and size changes a number of times in her life for a multitude of reasons, and recommended that I come back and get fitted in another six months. She also reminded me that Intimacy carries swimwear in cup sizes that I should try before my family vacation to the beach next month. Eager to see if Intimacy's line of swimwear would have the same cheerful effect on me, I made a follow-up appointment with Maria and left feeling like a million bucks. I'm so fortunate my friend told me about Intimacy. Never in a million years would I have thought I was among the 85 percent of women wearing the wrong bra size. I dare every woman to visit their local store to get fitted, check out their selection and find a renewed sense of self-confidence!

FISHEYE VIEW

As the grandson of famed oceanographer Jacques-Yves Cousteau, Fabien Cousteau has big flippers to fill. The Boston University grad is living in Key Largo for his latest project, Mission 31—in new digs 63 feet underwater. During the 50th anniversary of his grandfather's 30-day experiment under the Red Sea, Cousteau will stay submerged for 31 days, from June 1 to July 2, conducting research from Aquarius, a roughly 300-square-foot station. It's also hosting visiting divers, including Northeastern University diving officer Liz Bentley Magee. She tells us about her first day as an ocean dweller. / Hannah Sheinberg

Head to mos.org for details on a live conversation with Cousteau on June 26 at the Museum of Science.

5 am For once I don't feel the need to hit my snooze button. I'm too excited to stay in bed—plus, I have a bit more packing to do!

7 am My gear is loaded on a boat to be brought to the Aquarius habitat. They use giant pressure cooker-type pots to bring everything down.

7:30 am Right on time! We push off the dock.

8:15 am We arrive at Aquarius, 8 miles offshore. It's a sunny day, with calm waters. I, however, am not calm—I'm excited to get down!

8:40 am A buddy team of divers leave the boat to assist with the switch-out. We're replacing three members of the Mission 31 team for the remainder of the project.

9:10 am Team No. 1 arrives at the surface. The Navy doctor on staff checks them to make sure they're not suffering any signs of decompression sickness, otherwise known as the "bends."

9:30 am I hop in the water and dive down.

9:35 am Fabien Cousteau is there to greet meet when I pop up out of the moon pool. So cool! It smells kind of weird, and my ears constantly feel like I'm on a plane. Also, my voice is much higher than on the surface.

10 am I'm told how to exit the habitat in the case of an emergency, which also happens to be the same protocol for using the bathroom.

10:30 am I make my bunk, where I'll be sleeping for the next two weeks. I have an excellent view of the coral reef outside my window. I think you'd call this an "ocean view" room.

11 am I'm halfway through lunch (noodles) before I realize I'm eating underwater! I eat while talking with the Aquarius technicians and Cousteau about their past two weeks.

2 pm I wave to my husband and mom via the 24-hour camera that live feeds from Aquarius, then check my email, tweet and catch up on expedition plans.

3:30 pm Time to get ready for our first excursion.

4:30 pm We start the longest dive of my life. During 3½ hours, we set up zooplankton traps, measure temperature, depth and other aspects of the water column and scope out sites to set up experiments. Finally, we turn on my helmet camera and Skype with the Northeastern Marine Science Center in Nahant.

8:30 pm I return to Aquarius, rinse off, drink hot cocoa and make a game plan for tomorrow's dive.

10 pm I'm finally going to bed after a very long but very exciting dive. I've got 13 more days underwater, and I can't wait.

Motto

Matcha stirred into hot water is a soothing beverage steeped in Japanese tradition, but the cold drink that Tom Olcott and Henry Crosby concocted is invigorating and tingly. Their Boston-based Motto, which is made from nothing more than matcha (premium ground Japanese green tea), apple cider vinegar, lemon juice, honey, agave and sparkling water, is bittersweet, crisp and ever so slightly reminiscent of ginger beer.

THE ART OF MARRIAGE

A DEBUT NOVEL TACKLES THE INTRICACIES OF LOVE AND INFIDELITY WITH HUMOR AND HEART.

I Am Having So Much Fun Here Without You* by Courtney Maum Published by Simon & Schuster, 352 pages, $26 The author divides her time between the Berkshires, New York and France.

ON THE JACKET OF THIS DEBUT NOVEL, you'll find a photo of the author sporting a mischievous smirk that's suggestive of the tone within. Maum, a humor columnist, writes seriously about love, marriage and infidelity, but her book is also spirited and irreverent.

It follows Richard, an English artist living in Paris with his French wife, Anne, and their daughter. He's had a successful solo show and sold a painting, The Blue Bear, for a wad. But while the work holds meaning for his family, he deems it beneath him artistically. He'd rather pursue an edgy anti-war installation, putting objects through washing machines full of oil.

He hasn't been appreciative of his marriage, either. The book looks back to Richard's rollicking yet cozy courtship with Anne during his studies at Rhode Island School of Design. Their relationship is appealingly rendered—but so is his sexy extramarital liaison with Lisa, who leaves him after seven months. Then, just as he's resolving to recommit to his family, Anne finds Lisa's letters and kicks Richard out.

Stuck in limbo between two lost relationships, he roams around, guilty and sad, video-interviewing his parents about their long marriage. Anne dips a toe in the dating pool; this torments Richard, but he knows he deserves it. While exploring his heartache and his attempts to win back his wife, Maum provides comic relief, courtesy of art world nutters, spinning a story that's both witty and wise.

FROM PAGE 270: Walking toward home again, a home that wasn't home really, I felt crushed by disappointment and, worse yet, ignorance. I'd been assuming that this separation was as hard for Anne as it was for me. But now I realized that my wife might be experiencing this period in a completely different manner. That instead of feeling confined, she might at last feel free. ◆

INTO THE WOODS

MEET A TRANQUIL RETREAT NEAR NORTH CAROLINA'S BUSTLING RESEARCH TRIANGLE.

IN LESS TIME THAN IT TAKES TO DRIVE TO THE Cape on a busy summer day, you could be sipping champagne cocktails by the pool at the Umstead Hotel and Spa, set near the red-hot Research Triangle of Raleigh-Durham-Chapel Hill, North Carolina. Once known for "trees, tees and PhDs," the region has become a magnet for entrepreneurs, tech startups and 30-something hipsters who've helped juice up the art, music and food scenes. Craft breweries, cool bars and seed-to-plate restaurants seem to open nearly every week, along with once-abandoned warehouse galleries, chic boutiques and small-batch roasters of nuts, cocoa beans and coffee. But what the region lacked until recently was a world-class retreat.

Enter the Umstead Hotel and Spa, founded in 2007 and renovated last year. Nestled on 12 acres of woodlands overlooking its own lake, this privately owned AAA Five Diamond Award and Forbes Five Star Award property boasts stunning interiors, 150 sumptuous guest rooms and suites, several dining venues indoors and out, and plenty of accolades—U.S. News & World Report named it one of the Best Hotels in the U.S. for 2014, and it's landed on Conde Nast Traveler's Gold List for the past three years.

The Umstead is just a 10-minute taxi ride from the Raleigh-Durham airport, but if you want to bop around the Triangle, consider renting a car. The hotel is located in the town of Cary, which is about 30 minutes by car from Chapel Hill and roughly 20 minutes from Raleigh and Durham. Alternatively, if you're content to simply chill out and get pampered, then drop anchor at the Umstead; you might never want to leave.

Most rooms at the Umstead have balconies, many overlooking the lake. They also have dreamy Italian linens, deep soaking tubs, double vanities and soothing color schemes in earth tones of cream, wheat and sage. They're meant to evoke nature, a theme that continues throughout the hotel's ample art collection, featuring pottery, paintings, prints and sculptures from local and national artists, all crowned by a Dale Chihuly glass sculpture whose tendrils twist upward from a mossy base in the lobby bar. There's also an onsite gallery of original works available for sale; offerings change every few months. (Want more eye candy? The nearby North Carolina Museum of Art offers free admission to its ancient Egyptian artifacts, Old Master paintings, modern art and impressive collection of Rodin sculptures.)

Good news for those with canine companions: The hotel has dog-friendly rooms, including ones on the lower level with easy access to the grassy back lawn. There is a lovely quarter-mile walking path around the hotel's lake, and an off-leash dog park—DogWoods (a play on the state's flower)—will open this fall. For a more vigorous workout, head to the nearby William B. Umstead State Park for a hearty hike or a trail ride on one of the hotel's mountain bikes. Or connect with nature by taking one of the hotel's Saturday morning yoga classes, often held outdoors on a shaded carpet of grass overlooking the lake.

A visit to the Umstead isn't complete without a trip to the spa, a two-story oasis of rock, glass, bamboo and flowing water equipped with private men's and women's lounges, eucalyptus steam rooms, whirlpools and saunas. Consider booking a hot stone massage, which uses smooth black stones from nearby Reedy Creek.

Other choice spots to unwind include a deck chair or private cabana at the pool, which has its own small bar/cafe. The lobby lounge serves afternoon tea and creative seasonal cocktails such as the Jeweler, made with emerald-green chartreuse, dry vermouth and olive oil-infused gin. In the evening, the hotel offers live music, played until 11 pm on weekends.

You have a few choices for more substantial fare, including Herons, featuring refined takes on the bounty of North Carolina. Many ingredients come from less than a mile away, courtesy of the organic Culinary Farm on the sprawling campus of software company SAS. The menu offers a three-, four- or five-course chef's tasting dinner with dishes such as local chicken over a mix of farro, fava and boiled peanuts, accented with pickled okra and sorghum-cider barbecue sauce. The bar and lounge serves more casual fare, like warm sandwiches and omelets. In both venues you have the option of eating outdoors, surrounded by those beautiful woodlands.

Like many top resorts, the Umstead offers many impromptu treats—a fig smoothie at breakfast, a cool face spritz at the pool, a coloring book with woodland animal scenes and some crayons at lunch for the kids. Forgot a bathing suit? Head to the hotel gift shop to find a new one. Need some moisturizer? The hotel spa has a bounty of beauty products. Whatever you need, the hotel likely can provide. What you want, well, that will be up to you. ◆

MOODY BEAUTY

MOODY'S MEATS MAKE IT THE AREA'S MOST EXTRAORDINARY DELI.

MOODY'S DELICATESSEN & PROVISIONS
468 Moody St., Waltham
moodyswaltham.com

ANY WELL-TRAVELED FOOD NERD CAN tell you Greater Boston is blessed with a wonderfully broad restaurant scene, but for some reason, a traditional delicatessen has long been a significant gap here. Sure, there are plenty of sandwich counters slicing up Boar's Head cold cuts, but hardly anyone corns their own beef. Every mid-range indie French, Italian and nose-to-tail American restaurant makes its own pickles, sausages, charcuterie and salumi. But the casual takeout that makes its own salami and liverwurst? Scarcer than hen's teeth. That vacancy is painful to anyone who's visited hallowed deli institutions like Katz's in New York or Schwartz's in Montreal: Surely there's demand here for a place that pickles, smokes and steams its own pastrami, right?

Judging from the lines at Moody's Delicatessen & Provisions, which opened in November in downtown Waltham, the answer is an emphatic "Hell, yeah!" Granted, Moody's is not an Eastern European Jewish deli—you won't find knishes, kishka or kugel here. Its approach is more eclectic, embracing Ashkenazi, French, Spanish, Italian, American and other methods, producing a breathtaking range of cold cuts, pâtés, sausages and other pickled, cured, smoked and/or fermented foodstuffs in its own wholesale production operation, New England Charcuterie, conveniently located in its back room.

The densely packed deli, fridge and freezer cases, shelves and stacks of gourmet groceries, and ceilings hung with aging sausages present a maze best initially navigated through Moody's menu of made-to-order sandwiches. The aptly named Katz ($12.50) is a fine start: a pile of superb, fatty pastrami with hot mustard-pickle relish and Swiss cheese on excellent rye. (Most breads and rolls are supplied by Cambridge's inestimable Iggy's.) The Beast ($10) is a similarly high pile of thin-sliced roast beef, here given a messy, delightful layering of flavors with horseradish crema, fontina and onion marmalade on crusty white. Joshua's Bologna ($10), namesake of chef/owner Joshua Smith, features brash accompaniments (housemade truffle chips, honey mustard and housemade habanero pickles) that might overwhelm the delicate flavor of the salume were it not laid on so generously.

The pork roll breakfast sandwich ($5.50) features one of the more manageable portion sizes here, showcasing Smith's version of the Spam-like "Taylor ham" beloved by Jerseyites, Philadelphians and Ween fans, layered with scrambled egg, cheese and spicy ketchup on an oversized English muffin. The banh mi ($12.50) is the goateed-Spock version of the light, veggie-centric Vietnamese original: thick layers of seared pork belly, smoked shoulder, coarse pork pâté, creamy chicken-liver mousse, fresh cilantro and mint, shredded pickled veggies and citrusy/fiery sriracha aioli on a long ciabatta roll. Its heft and richness make it a trencherman's delectable challenge. Far simpler but as impressive is Dave's Corned Beef ($11.50), with its absolutely sublime rendition of thin-sliced pickled brisket, sauerkraut and Thousand Island dressing on rye.

Retail groceries include some lovely small-producer cheeses, pastas, vinegars and oils. But the real reason to shop here are the housemade goods: scores of refrigerated and frozen cured meats, cold cuts and sausages, as well as prepared soups, meat sauces, kimchi and pickles, plus kitchen staples like meat stocks, garlic puree and lard. We brought home and were mightily impressed by spicy sopressata ($25/pound), coppa ($42/pound), lomo ($49/pound), saucisson sec ($22/pound), Tuscan salami ($25/pound), bierwurst ($9/pound) and Texas-style hot links ($10/pound). The occasionally eye-popping prices are partly attributable to the same high production costs that have forced many traditional small delis out of business in recent decades. Moody's also sources its animals from small, sustainable local farms rather than huge factory operations. Most often, though, the quality eases the sting: That costly lomo (Spanish-style dry-cured pork tenderloin) compares favorably with imported jamón ibérico that retails locally for four times as much.

The eat-in dining setup is a bit tight, with maybe 20 seats between the banquette seating by the sunny front windows and the long communal table wedged by the deli counter and retail refrigerated cases. The staff is uniformly solicitous, eager to take orders and offer assistance, making the best case for retail purchases by handing out copious samples. Whether stuffed into a sandwich to eat on the spot, or bagged for the home kitchen or grill, Moody's meats make a compelling case for the wonders (and sometimes steep costs) of the old-school ways, and in so doing vaults Greater Boston into a rarified tier: We're now a place with a destination delicatessen. ◆

Q: I HATE THAT FIRST LOOK AT MYSELF IN A SWIMSUIT EACH SUMMER; WHAT CAN I DO ABOUT MY CELLULITE?

A: Cellulite is normal fat beneath the skin which appears bumpy because it pushes against connective tissue, septae, causing the skin above it to pucker. Cellulite most commonly appears on the thighs. The most effective treatment we have found to treat stubborn cellulite is RF (Radio Frequency) Body Contouring.

Radio waves create heat that break down the fat to a liquid state and enhance the elasticity of the septae. This allows the fat to escape from the confines of the septae so it can be purged by your body, thus reducing or eliminating cellulite.

RF Body Contouring is perfect to do in the summer, even if you have a tan. The treatments do not hurt and there is no downtime. Our SkinHealth clients have been thrilled with their results!

JERSEY BOYS ★★½
Starring John Lloyd Young, Erich Bergen, Michael Lomenda, Vincent Piazza, Mike Doyle, Renée Marino, Erica Piccininni, Joseph Russo and Christopher Walken. Screenplay and musical book by Marshall Brickman and Rick Elice. Directed by Clint Eastwood. At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.

Movies / Brett Michel

ONE FOR THE FOLKS

CLINT EASTWOOD SAFELY SERENADES THE AARP SET.

WHEN DISCUSSING WHAT MIGHT FILL this page with my editor, I told her that Clint Eastwood's 33rd movie behind the camera might not be the best film opening this week; nor does it have the benefit of recognizable names filling out its lead roles. What it does offer—as a big-screen adaptation of a long-running, Tony-winning musical—is exactly the kind of middle-of-the-road entertainment that your parents will love.

"Funny," my editor said, "my parents were just talking to me about how they want to see Jersey Boys!"

And while the 84-year-old legend's latest movie is a hit-or-miss affair, you (or at least your parents) might not want to miss hearing hits made popular by Frankie Valli and the Four Seasons. The pop quartet's rise and fall (and rise again) is dramatized in a far more naturalistic fashion than you might expect from a filmed version of a Broadway musical—certainly not one that uses the original musical book as the foundation of its screenplay. This isn't one of those razzle-dazzle affairs with rapid-fire editing, like Rob Marshall's Chicago. Characters don't spontaneously burst into song, dancing across the screen in a flurry of motion.

Instead, Eastwood favors a more realistic approach, where songs like "Sherry," "Walk Like a Man," "Big Girls Don't Cry" and "Can't Take My Eyes Off You" are presented as live performances when the band is touring, recording or appearing on American Bandstand or The Ed Sullivan Show.

And although the names of most of the actors onscreen are unfamiliar, three of the Four Seasons were cherry-picked by Eastwood, The Man with No Name himself, after he watched them perform their roles on stage, catching productions in Las Vegas, San Francisco and New York.

For Valli, the group's legendary lead singer, Eastwood cast John Lloyd Young, the 38-year-old actor who won a Tony when he originated the role on Broadway nine years ago; fortuitously, Young had returned for a limited Broadway engagement when Eastwood visited. And while he may not sound exactly like Valli, Young still has a mean falsetto.

For Nick Massi, vocal arranger and bass guitarist for the group, Eastwood chose Canadian actor Michael Lomenda, who performed the role in the first national tour and makes an assured film debut here.

Bob Gaudio, the business-savvy member of the group, is played by another veteran of the first national tour, Erich Bergen. The native New Yorker has also performed in the Las Vegas and Los Angeles productions, portraying the role for more than three years. Ironically, he had been passed over for the role in an earlier, aborted incarnation of the film that was to be directed by Jon Favreau. "They didn't think I was quite right for the part," the actor deadpanned a few weeks back, during a New York press conference for the film.

This isn't one of those razzle-dazzle affairs with rapid-fire editing.

"You've got people who've done 1,200 performances," said a bearded Eastwood at the same press event. "How much better can you know a character?"

Eastwood, however, did look beyond the stage for one founding member of the Four Seasons. Vincent Piazza, best known as Lucky Luciano on HBO's Boardwalk Empire, plays Tommy DeVito, the driving force behind the band and the first member we see onscreen.

As an instrumental version of "December, 1963 (Oh, What a Night)" plays on the soundtrack, Tommy crosses a street in Belleville, New Jersey, approaches the camera and begins speaking directly to the audience, informing us that "There were three ways out of the neighborhood: You join the Army and maybe get killed; you get mobbed up, maybe get killed that way... or you get famous. For us, it was two out of three."

OK, so while characters might not sing any dialogue, a number of them do address us from time to time. Does it work? Your parents might think so, but... Eastwood's not exactly Martin Scorsese.

It's unfortunate to see him immediately introduce local made man Gyp DeCarlo (Christopher Walken), who takes a shine to a 16-year-old, pre-"Valli" Frankie Castelluccio. Meanwhile, Tommy runs errands for Gyp—when he and Nick aren't getting tossed into jail for petty crime. This aspect of the film is toothless, and these and other dark edges rarely work.

Group infighting, financial problems and domestic dramas all pile up predictably, until you wish the Four Seasons would stop turning to speak to us and just sing.

In the end, Walken actually gets to do a little soft-shoe, along with the rest of the cast, who finally bow to Jersey Boys' stage origins during what amounts to a closing credits curtain call on a Warner Bros. backlot street set, as everyone sings and dances to a reprise of "December, 1963 (Oh, What a Night)."

It's a perfectly pleasant, innocuous way to end the film. Your parents will love it. ◆

GINGER BAKER'S JAZZ CONFUSION plays the Wilbur Theatre on June 29.

Music / Paul Robicheau

RHYTHM DEVIL

'60S ROCK SURVIVOR WITH FEARSOME REPUTATION EXPANDS HIS AFRO-JAZZ LEGACY.

His glassy blue eyes locked in laser focus, Ginger Baker stares from the cover of his first album in 16 years, cigarette smoke curled around his weathered face. It's an intimidating gaze in keeping with the man who once posted "Beware of Mr. Baker" outside his home and wielded his cane to smash the nose of the director filming a 2012 documentary of the same name. The album title Why? seems ironic given the legendary drummer's disdain for fielding open-ended questions.

Despite his reputation as a cantankerous interview subject, with his new album and a tour that brings his quartet Jazz Confusion to the Wilbur Theatre on June 29, the 74-year-old Baker agreed to talk from his new home in Canterbury, England.

Most people know him from rock supergroup Cream, with Eric Clapton and Jack Bruce, although that pioneering trio lasted only two years in the late '60s. "It's like a f---ing albatross around my neck," Baker says, though he shares pride in the music and satisfaction with Cream's 2005 reunion shows, something not likely to ever happen again. "No chance, no way," he says. "We did it."

What Baker mainly did before and after Cream was jazz. He dismisses the label of rock drummer, though he influenced countless players in that field. Neither is he keen on mulling how jazz, and then African music, came naturally to a red-headed Englishman, or what it was about the drums that made sense to him from the moment he jumped behind a kit as a teenager at a party. "It doesn't make any sense at all," he says. "You have to be f---ing insane to play the drums!"

"Once you can play what you feel, what's the point of practicing?"

Baker says he hasn't sat at his kit to practice in 30 years. "Once you can play what you feel, what's the point of practicing? You practice to do something, and then when you get on a gig, you want to play [that] and show how clever you are. It's usually got nothing to do with what the other guys are playing. Just listen to the other guys. That's how we all play."

That instinctual interplay holds true in Jazz Confusion, which includes saxophonist Pee Wee Ellis (from James Brown's seminal '60s band), bassist Alec Dankworth and African percussionist Abass Dodoo. "I've been working with Abass for several years now, and we really click," Baker says. "Alec is my favorite bass player of all time. He fits with me and Abass like a glove. And Pee Wee's playing his ass off."

The band shifts from jazz standards like Wayne Shorter's "Footprints" and Sonny Rollins' "St. Thomas" to the adapted Nigerian folk tune "Aiko Biaye" and originals on Why? When Baker locks into polyrhythmic currents with Dodoo's hand drums, their natural, synchronized pulse recalls Baker's onetime pairing with drummer Tony Allen in Nigerian bandleader Fela Kuti's Africa '70 group, as well as Baker's drum battles with his jazz heroes Elvin Jones and Art Blakey during the '70s.

"They all became really good friends of mine—they accepted me at their level," Baker says, sharply adding, "We never had drum battles. [That's] some American lunacy. We had drum duets. That's what it's all about in Africa, drummers playing together and working together, creating sounds together. Drum battles are like saying, 'I've got a better technique than you. Ha, ha, ha!' That's a lot of crap."

Baker still holds his own at the kit, although he battles pain from degenerative osteoarthritis of the spine. "It's all right when I'm playing—it's when I stop," says Baker, who's embarking on a 10-city North American tour. "I loathe and detest traveling. I enjoyed it in the old days. I don't enjoy it anymore."

It's a wonder he got past those days, which included many heroin relapses, desert driving mishaps and political feuds in Nigeria that forced him to close the studio he built there. Once he rode a swivel chair down a flight of stairs to record the sound. At interview's end, on the subject of his first Boston show since the '90s, one can sense the gruff old man grinning as he barks, "If I survive that long!" ◆

WELCOME MATTERS

WHEN YOU RENT TO STRANGERS, YOU SEE HOME SWEET HOME IN A WHOLE NEW LIGHT.

I AM A BIG PROPONENT OF THE HOUSE-RENTING website HomeAway. HomeAway places tend to be cheaper than hotels and more likely to actually exist than joints you find on Craigslist. You don't get the reassuring predictability that you would at a hotel or resort, but hotels don't give you the chance to parse a bookcase and marvel that someone bought Dan Quayle's autobiography.

Thus far, my HomeAway experiences have always been from the renter side of the equation, thus sidestepping the possibility that I'd ever return home to find a guy hosting the Fattie Fiesta Spring Orgy '14 in my living room. But a month or two ago it occurred to me that if we listed our own house, we could then take a vacation ourselves and have it underwritten by the renter. I'll admit that I didn't relish the possibility of a weird dude drooling on my pillow, but Yankee frugality trumped latent germophobia and we decided to give it a try.

The work starts with the listing itself. Photographing a house is harder than you think. I have to scrap one shot of the kitchen when I belatedly noticed that you can see my reflection on the microwave door. I figure potential renters prefer to get a house that doesn't include a scary ghost man peering out of the microwave.

Somewhat to my surprise, within a week or so we have our first booking: a British family, set to arrive in a month's time. My jubilation at getting the "Payment Received" email is tempered by the realization that we now have a whole lot more work to do—because the reality of a booking causes you to contemplate the utter weirdness of your house.

I think most houses on HomeAway are vacation places, which makes sense. If you're the owner, you keep a few clothes locked in a closet but otherwise set the place up with minimal personal effects. But we don't have a vacation house. We just have the one house, which, like all primary domiciles, is a walled litany of quirks, neuroses and personal psychological defects.

The daunting size of my task becomes evident when I ponder the bedroom above our garage. I should probably remove every item on the walls or shelves. I definitely have to hide the small ceramic statue of an Asian man who's bending over with his pants down, grinning back at you from between his legs. He's a handsome paperweight and a wonderful reminder that a friend of mine visited Thailand, but he's not HomeAway material.

Into the closet he goes, along with all the framed items that qualify as overly self-referential or vainglorious, which is most of them. I don't need anyone yukking it up because my grownup house features awards from high school on the wall. OK, an award. Which is even sadder.

The kitchen presents the most problems. Why do we have a kitchen drawer devoted to old checkbooks, sunblock and baby pacifiers? A dispassionate review shows that our plates are chipped and our water glasses are a mismatched hodgepodge of calcification—I guess it's been a while since our wedding registry. And we'll have to tell the guests how lighting the oven trips the GFI outlet behind the coffeemaker. Or not. I mean, who bakes on vacation?

The fridge is a special sort of nightmare. I don't know how often you remove and scrub all the shelves in your fridge, but if it's less than once a year it may as well be never. I think our fridge looks superficially clean, but when I pull out the drawers I discover the bottom is coated by a slick of what appears to be fossilized barbecue sauce, which I chisel off with a sturdy metal spatula. The icemaker bucket contains, as usual, one giant glacier that's jamming up the dispenser. Hey, the listing didn't say nothin' about convenient ice cubes.

Going room to room, I find a growing list of tasks awaiting my attention. I tighten the bolts on one of the toilets. I reverse the doorknob to the garage so we can lock it from the inside. I scrub the mildew off the grill and get an extra propane tank on hand. I'm probably taking this way more seriously than most people who rent houses. Certainly more than that guy up at Winnipesaukee a couple years ago who neglected to mention that one of his house's "bedrooms" was actually a porch that leaked so badly there was moss growing on the floor. Ah, Craigslist.

Eventually the house is as spotless and depersonalized as we can reasonably make it. "Do you think I can stop by that week and water the plants?" Heather asks. No, nosy innkeeper, you can't. It's called HomeAway, not HomeDroppingByToSpyOnYou. We'll get new plants.

And who knows—maybe new pillowcases. ◆

LEAP OF FAITH

THE ACTRESS SOUNDS OFF ON ALBANIAN PRIDE, BAD-GIRL ROLES AND HER RETURN TO BOSTON.

BORN AND BRED IN WATERTOWN, ACTRESS ELIZA DUSHKU, 33, has returned from Los Angeles to further her education and will begin working toward a bachelor's degree in Boston this fall. She began acting at age 10 and is perhaps best known for playing Faith Lehane on Buffy the Vampire Slayer and its spinoff, Angel. Other TV credits include Tru Calling, That 70s Show, Ugly Betty, The Big Bang Theory and Dollhouse, on which she also served as a producer. She has lent her voice to numerous video games, and she can currently be heard on the Disney series Hulk and the Agents of S.M.A.S.H. On the big screen, she has appeared in True Lies, Wrong Turn, Jay and Silent Bob Strike Back and Bring It On, and she recently wrapped production on Jane Wants a Boyfriend. Together with her brother, Nate, she is developing a biopic about incendiary artist Robert Mapplethorpe with her production company, Boston Diva. An honorary ambassador to Albania, she's active in numerous charities, including one started by her mother to help children in Uganda.

JONATHAN SOROFF: Do you consider yourself a diva? ELIZA DUSHKU: I think there are all kinds of divas. I named my company when I was 17 years old. I was a different kind of diva in my Buffy the Vampire Slayer days, but yes, I think I'm outspoken and know what I want. I won't compromise on certain things. Never a wallflower. Always involved, on the move and getting things done.

Do you think people like you, who started acting at a really early age, have an advantage in the business? It can be a disadvantage, because you're exposed to a lot at an early age, and a lot of child actors never make it past that to become adult actors, so I'd say it depends. I've seen both.

What was it like for you? You've said that you were headed in the wrong direction at one point. It was my time to straighten out. I realized that I wasn't living the life I was meant to. That's part of why I've moved back to Boston and will be starting university in the fall. I've been talking about it for 15 years. It's a whole new trajectory for me that makes me really happy.

Did you ever consider changing your name when you started out? No. I'm a proud Albanian-Danish American. When I was 12, a lot of people told me to change my name, and Arnold Schwarzenegger overheard someone saying that to me. He said, "Nevah evah evah change your name. Trust me, people will learn it."

What are your duties as an honorary Albanian ambassador? We're in the home stretch on our Dear Albania documentary, so my first duty is to make sure it does well. It's airing on PBS and across Albania and Eastern Europe. Secondly, I'm co-hosting the Albanian-American Success Stories Gala in New York. I do exactly as the title suggests. I'm a connector. I'm a loud and proud Albanian, and that hasn't always been cool. In the United States, it didn't get more minority than to be Albanian, but it's funny to see all these closet Albanians coming out. Just a few years ago, Robert De Niro declared he was part Albanian at Cannes. I'm an advocate for Albanian culture.

"I think I'm outspoken and know what I want. I won't compromise on certain things."

Weirdest Buffy fan encounter? I'm not using words like weird and creepy and rabid. I'm replacing them with enthusiastic and intense and loyal. They have a different kind of appreciation for this body of work, and it's resonated with them on a very deep level. It's helped a lot of them discover who they are or want to be. In terms of a weird experience, I get marriage proposals at my Comic-Con panels. My attitude is "Let your freak flag fly!" I love it! I love them, and I'm so grateful. Best fans in the world.

What's your favorite role from the voice acting you've done? The voice of She-Hulk, so my little nieces and nephews can see it. I loved having my 5-year-old nephew say, after seeing me as the only badass green girl with all the Hulks, "Aunt Eliza, I'm so glad that you're a girl. There's just some things girls can do that boys can't."

Why do you think you're so good at playing bad girls? Probably has to do with growing up with a very strong feminist mother and so many males who respected women. I never really felt that cultural stigma of "I'm a girl and therefore can't do such and such." It didn't originate from being a bad girl. I think it came from being encouraged to be outspoken, smart, bold and fearless, and that translated. I remember walking into my first audition here in Boston, and a lot of the girls were in dresses, with their mothers there. My brother brought me. I'd come straight from the playground, in a dirty T-shirt and cut-offs. Lucky for me, they were looking for a tomboy, but I had a sense of myself and it wasn't a societal standard. I think it made me stand out.

Thing that fulfills you creatively? People sharing their stories. That was sort of an advantage that I was blessed with by my mother and my family. Growing up, my mother would chaperone students on trips around the world, and she could always bring a kid for free, so we traveled—but not to Cancun or Hawaii. The joke in our family was that summer vacation would be somewhere there had just been a revolution, and if there hadn't, my mother would start one. But we would meet people with every kind of background. I was raised to listen to people's stories and to be curious about their lives.

Project you'd most want to do after you're done with school? I've done comedy and I've done drama, but I've always wanted to work with Scorsese. Fingers crossed. I've also always wanted to work with the Farrelly brothers. I love those guys. But I have a new life right now. I'm on kind of a different path for the time being.

So what's it like to be back in Boston? I'd rather be physically cold than emotionally stagnant. I just sort of come alive when I'm home. ◆

DRESSED for SUCCESS

The founders of five new fashion ventures share their stories—and style.

TIANA HARAGUCHI / Boutikey

"When it comes to fashion, I love trying new things and taking risks. I use pieces like simple crop tops and button-downs to balance out trendier pieces, like floral prints."

THE IDEA FOR BOUTIKEY WAS BORN FROM Tiana Haraguchi's love of shopping—and a subpar experience she had doing just that at a favorite boutique, where she ended up paying full price during a major sale because of a miscommunication. She left a stable job in corporate finance to found the app, which gives local stores a platform for sharing sales and event info with shoppers, who in turn rack up reward points and discover new boutiques and merch. The launch wasn't without its challenges; Haraguchi admits to learning more about business in the first three months at Boutikey than she had in three years in finance.

"There is definitely competition for attention," she says. "Store owners get hit up by 20 different companies a day—tech companies, designers and reps, and more." Some boutiques had to be wooed to sign up, so Haraguchi offered a free trial. Now Boutikey has nearly 70 stores on board, ranging from clothing and accessories shops to decor, jewelry and beauty purveyors. Version 2.0 debuts in July with a sleeker design and new features, like advanced searches and direct messaging to boutique owners. Also on the horizon: Boutikey is slated to debut a shopping platform for retail partners by summer's end, and Haraguchi hopes to add two new cities to the mix in coming months.

"I am a big fan of taking simple pieces and dressing them up or down. For this look, I took something chic—this Amanda Uprichard skirt—and dressed it down with a cotton button-down from Rails."

SARA HARTMANN + NATALIE LACHALL | Secret Ships

"WE WANTED TO RECREATE the excitement of shopping abroad," says Natalie LaChall, co-founder of Secret Ships, a caravan-webshop one-two punch inspired by its creators' lifelong wanderlust. (Co-founder Sara Hartmann has visited 40 countries, while LaChall did a stint in a traveling circus. "The plans for our caravan were inspired by the caravan for the sideshow she was in," Hartmann says.)

This isn't just any import business. "While I was taking time out last winter in Mexico, I had the idea to import in a way that was actually design-oriented," Hartmann recalls. "I pitched Natalie on the idea, and we shook on it right away." Offerings include clothing that LaChall designs and sews using globally sourced textiles like Dutch Wax and hand-loomed Guatemalan ikat, alongside home goods, jewelry and other treasures Hartmann picks up in her travels.

Browse the goods online, or find the stylish caravan at local outdoor markets; SoWa's weekly market is a favorite destination. But the duo can't set up shop just anywhere. "It's actually still not legal to have a retail truck that's not a food truck, so, for now, we're limited to private spaces, not public city streets," Hartmann explains, although she hopes Mayor Marty Walsh may change that.

They've kept the caravan close to home while getting a feel for the business, but it will clock plenty of miles in the next year or two; Secret Ships will set sail on a New England college campus tour, and LaChall is looking forward to hitting destinations like New York and music festivals like SXSW and Bonnaroo.

"These bracelets are hand-woven in Mali by Tuareg women."

SAM FISHMAN | Stede Threads

"THERE'S A SENTIMENTAL FEEL FOR skatcboards," Sam Fishman says. "You go through a journey with each board—you landed a certain trick, or you were in a special place. But if you're skating a lot, you go through a lot and they stack up, so they are really just bound for the landfill." He's hoping to change that with Stede Threads, his new headwear line aimed at the tightknit skater scene. Each piece features a laser-cut wooden label made from recycled skateboard decks, sewn on by Fishman himself.

He started the project through Emerson's E3 entrepreneurship program, a launchpad for the likes of Roxy's Grilled Cheese. The 22-year-old marketing communications major is quick to call it the best thing he's done in college. "The founder of E3, Karl Baehr, passed away this fall while the program was already underway," Fishman explains. "It was challenging to stay afloat through that loss." But he kept at it, earning second place—scoring grant money and mentoring—at this spring's ninth annual E3 Expo with a project that reflects his passion for the skateboarding community. "We're of a different breed. People don't really understand how we can put our bodies on the line for something that seems meaningless, but for us it's all about progression, and it drives me to explore the world."

"I like to go for mainly solid pieces and then mix in some flair. I tie-dyed a bunch of my white socks, so those are always good."

"I grabbed this floral button-down in a thrift store in Maine—pretty sure I found it in the old ladies' section!"

BRIDGETTE HYLTON | ShopRagHouse

Along with fellow Harvard Law School grad Joana Florez, Bridgette Hylton launched ShopRagHouse to give would-be fashion designers a way to bring their sketches to life. "Personal style and preference should be the driving force of fashion," Hylton explains, citing that infamous "blue sweater" scene from The Devil Wears Prada as an example of everything wrong with the fashion industry. "Why should a select few dictate what's in style?"

Billing itself alternately as a "virtual Project Runway" and a "Kickstarter for fashion," ShopRagHouse allows users to submit their own sketches or pledge on user-submitted work, determining which designs will get put into production. From there, Florez and Hylton do the legwork, sourcing materials, finding manufacturers and negotiating deals.

Contestants span demographics and are scattered across the globe; outside of Massachusetts, the most enthusiastic member base is in the UK, and one very active member is a 16-year-old boy from Singapore.

So have the founders tried their hand at it? You bet—and, naturally, they left decisions on the fabric and finish for their designs up to the crowd. "We want to give people a sense of ownership: This dress is here because of me, and my opinion was heard," Hylton says. "If we have allowed someone to feel that way, we have done our job and we are happy."

Here, Hylton's wearing the Elsa Dress, one of her own designs and among the first that ShopRagHouse transformed into a wearable piece, paired with bracelets by the Rhode Island-based Alex and Ani.

Hylton's style philosophy? "Have fun with it! I love bold prints, African fabrics and bright colors."

CASEY DESMOND + JESSIE AMMONS-CARSWELL / ABNDN

EACH PIECE FROM ABNDN, THE aptly named jewelry, accessories and clothing line from Casey Desmond and Jessie Ammons-Carswell, begins with a journey. The daring duo take to forgotten corners to source skeleton keys, antique chains and other found materials to incorporate into their designs—and their treasure hunts through the woods and over asylum walls have gotten them into situations they could never have prepared for.

"One day we were walking through the basement of an asylum that has since been completely cleared out. I kicked something and looked down to see what it was. It was a grenade. Luckily it had already been detonated," Desmond recalls. "Sometimes we come across people, too, who are squatting in an abandoned space. We try to respect each other, because we are all doing something illegal," Ammons-Carswell adds. "We haven't gotten into trouble yet, but we have had several very close calls. Luckily, we've gotten good at pulling off the whole nonchalant 'Who, me?'"

Their process guarantees that each piece will be unique, but mystique isn't their only motivation for upcycling. "There's more than enough landfill on the face of the planet," Ammons-Carswell explains. "So we're doing our part to enjoy style and dressing up, without making the planet sicker than it already is."

◀ "My style is a mix of body-con fabrics and ambiguous silhouettes. My eye is attracted to color and shape, and I love playful combinations of the two," says Desmond, an electro-pop musician known for her bold style long before the line's launch.

"My style is currently centered on mixing black pieces in different textures and gritty, industrial-looking accessories."

METRO BOSTON'S FLEET-FOOTED GUIDE TO ENTERTAINMENT, CULTURE AND RUNNERS' HIGHS

AGENDA for 6/25–7/8

The Run Around

Earn your beer.

THERE ARE A LOT OF REASONS people run: to get exercise, to get fresh air, to be part of a community, to earn all the ice-cold beer they can guzzle at a race after-party. It's that last perk that most interests us, if we're being honest — but participants in the Tory Row 5K will get to reap all the aforementioned benefits. Now in its fourth year, the 5K through Harvard Square is less a race than a full-on weekend of revelry. It kicks off Friday with a "Pickup Party" where runners can pick up their race numbers along with a nice buzz. (The race isn't until Sunday, so you'll have Saturday to nurse a hangover. Ahem, prepare for the big race.) Sunday's race starts at 9:30 am on Church Street, but stick around for a big after-party, where the top male and female finishers will be honored with laurel crowns handmade by Petali Flowers; everyone else will be rewarded with craft beer from local breweries and eats from Tory Row. / Alexandra Cavallo

THE TORY ROW 5K starts at 9:30 am on June 29 at 27 Church St., Cambridge. toryrow.us. tr5k, $40.

Edited by Alexandra Cavallo

BRAIN MATTER Lydia R. Diamond's Smart People shines a light on a topic that many people who eonsider themselves intellectual, enlightened citizens of the world would rather pretend is not a part of their lives: racism. It's a subject the already mueh-lauded production, enjoying its world premiere under thc direction of the Huntington Theatre Company's Peter DuBois, addresses with grace and humor. The play focuscs on four "smart people" (two professors, a surgical intern and an actress, all with ties to Harvard University), who, despite their estimable pedigrees and education, are not immune to prejudice—whether it be learned or, as onc character suggests, perhaps innate. Performed on a two-story modular set, upon which the actors both interact and perform alone, Smart People is a layered look at raee and perception worthy of its name. It runs through July 6 at the Calderwood Pavilion at the BCA. / Alexandra Cavallo PHOTO: T. CHARLES ERICKSON

GUILTY PLEASURE

The art of jewel thievery requires finesse, discretion and stealth. For Doris Payne, already a walking target for suspicion and discrimination as a black woman in segregated 1950s America, it would seem an impossible feat to pull off. Her 60-year career defied those odds. Co-directors Kirk Marcolina and Matthew Pond dive into this sensational true story in The Life and Crimes of Doris Payne, pairing stylized re-creations of her dazzling heists with candid interviews and footage of the ever-unapologetic Payne, who, at 83, recently pled guilty to the theft of a $22,500 diamond ring in California. Get to know her MO on June 25 at the Museum of Fine Arts. / Spencer Shannon

Reviews by Brett Michel

22 Jump Street ★★★ In Phil Lord and Christopher Miller's worthy sequel to their big-screen update of the TV show that launched Johnny Depp's career, Deputy Chief Hardy (Nick Offerman) dryly intones the following to officers Schmidt (Jonah Hill) and Jenko (Channing Tatum): "Ladies, nobody gave a s--t about the Jump Street reboot. Anyone with half a brain, myself included, thought it was destined to fail, spectacularly. But you got lucky. So now, this department has invested a lot of money to make sure Jump Street keeps going. We've doubled the budget, as if spending twice the money guaranteed twice the profit." This winking comedy, from the directors who also helmed the surprise smash The Lego Movie, is a sequel about sequels—and it nearly doubled the opening weekend gross of its predecessor. Sending the cops from high school to college to do "the same undercover student thing," the film also mercilessly skewers romantic dramas, as the partners decide to "investigate other people" in an "open investigation," with hilarious results. "Do the same thing as last time," Hardy advises. "Everyone's happy." Yes, even this critic. (At Boston Common, Fenway, Somerville and in the suburbs.)

Belle ★★★ Director Amma Asante's second feature is inspired by the story of Dido Elizabeth Belle (a luminous Gugu Mbatha-Raw), the mixed-race daughter of Capt. Sir John Lindsay (Matthew Goode in a cameo). Despite being illegitimate, she's raised in a loving household by her aristocratic great-uncle Lord Mansfield and his wife (Tom Wilkinson and Emily Watson, both in fine form), yet the darkness of her skin prevents her from fully participating in the traditions of her noble standing. While her white—and also illegitimate—cousin Elizabeth (Sarah Gadon) is readied for marriage, Belle is headed for a life as a wealthy spinster. But as formula dictates, she meets an attractive young idealist, John Davinier (newcomer Sam Reid, in an unfortunate wig), a lowly vicar's son. It's all captured in a candy-colored digital palette that's distressingly become the norm, flying in the face of filmed costume dramas of the past—but then, this is a story driven by change, with Davinier and Belle challenging her great-uncle to do right by his role as lord chief justice, helping bring an end to slavery in England. (At Kendall Square, West Newton and in the suburbs.)

Chef ★★★ This isn't a movie about Jon Favreau. Sure, he wrote, directed and starred in this comedy about a once-hot gourmet chef, Carl Casper, who's in a creative rut. After being called out by his critics, Casper begins serving up delectable Cuban sandwiches from a food truck, winning back favor from customers and critics alike by returning to his roots. Favreau's a filmmaker who impressed with the hit indies Swingers and Made, and then a couple of massive Iron Man movies, before making the joyless critical and commercial failure Cowboys & Aliens. But Chef is a small picture, a tasty concoction in which his simmering acting chops are brought to a boil by 10-year-old Emjay Anthony, who delightfully underplays Casper's son, Percy, as the two bond over the heat of the truck's grill on a cross-country trip. Is Favreau as thin-skinned as Casper, who gets into a very public social media spat with one of his earliest supporters? Who cares, when such big talents as Dustin Hoffman, John Leguizamo, Sofia Vergara, Oliver Platt, Scarlett Johansson and Robert Downey Jr. are along for the ride? (At Boston Common, Fenway, Kendall Square, Somerville, West Newton and in the suburbs.)

Edge of Tomorrow ★★★★ Doug Liman's entertaining new science-fiction film easily could have become another high-concept, low-return failure like Jumper. Hell, look at that lame name: Edge of Tomorrow. The director should have trusted his original title: All You Need Is Kill, the same as the Hiroshi Sakurazaka novel on which it's based. But the title happens to be the only glaring flaw of this film following Maj. William Cage (Tom Cruise), who's essentially trapped within the plot of Groundhog Day—only now, déjà vu equals death. Unlike Bill Murray's Phil Connors, Cage almost always finds his endlessly repeating day concluding with him battling aliens and getting killed in inventively excruciating ways, a setup that mines nearly as many laughs as you'd find in Murray's classic comedy. Love Cruise or hate him (or simply find him couch-jumping crazy), the film offers something for everyone; fans will eat this up, while haters will delight as the actor dies in countless hilarious ways befitting the best of Wile E. Coyote and his encounters with Acme's finest anvils. Don't be surprised if you find yourself buying a ticket again after the movie is over. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Godzilla ★★½ Sixty years after Ishiro Honda unleashed the H-bomb-spawned "Gojira" on Japanese audiences still reeling from the horrors of Hiroshima, Godzilla once again breathes atomic fire in director Gareth Edwards' crowd-pleasing reboot. But while the scaly sexagenarian glimpsed here is vastly superior to the wrong-headed monster seen in Roland Emmerich's disastrous 1998 reimagining starring Matthew Broderick, at least that version of the Thunder Lizard wasn't reduced to playing a cameo role in his own film. Nevertheless, Edwards' reverential rendition of the King of the Monsters—while larger and created with expensive CGI—is closer in design and temperament to Honda's, which was nothing more than a man inside a rubber suit stomping on miniature reproductions of Tokyo. So it's a shame that Edwards' admirable interpretation relegates everyone's favorite reptile mostly to the shadows. And unfortunately, though the movie's advertising prominently features Bryan Cranston as conspiracy-minded Joe Brody, the Breaking Bad star's character doesn't survive long enough to witness Godzilla's late-film reveal; the real star is Kick-Ass's Aaron Taylor-Johnson as Joe's thinly written son, Ford. (At Boston Common, Fenway, Somerville and in the suburbs.)

How to Train Your Dragon 2 ★★★½ When How to Train Your Dragon hit theaters, DreamWorks Animation finally offered Disney/Pixar some legitimate competition—not only visually, but also with its level of storytelling and character sophistication. Sure, co-directors Dean DeBlois and Chris Sanders had fashioned a familiar story with their tale of Hiccup (voiced by Jay Baruchel), the scrawny Viking who bonds with the creature that's supposed to be his sworn enemy. Toothless, his cat-like dragon steed, shared DNA with the alien in DeBlois and Sanders' earlier success, Lilo & Stitch, which also featured a youth secretly fostering a lethal beast. And while it may have lacked the depth of Pixar's best, it was still a real beauty. Flying solo this time, DeBlois picks up five years after Hiccup and Toothless united man and monster in the Vikings' island community. The pair spend their days soaring through the skies and charting new territories, until they encounter the mysterious Dragon Rider—and a devastating new threat. While this gorgeously rendered sequel isn't as humorous as its predecessor, it's darker, richer and more mature—much like its older and wiser protagonist. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Maleficent ★★ After questionably rebooting Alice in Wonderland as a vehicle for Johnny Depp's Mad Hatter, Disney's at it again, needlessly revisiting Sleeping Beauty in live action from the perspective of Maleficent, who's given high-cheekboned life by Angelina Jolie. Continuing the violent tradition of Disney's live-action misfire The Lone Ranger, screenwriter Linda Woolverton spins a wheel around rape culture, as future king Stefan (Sharlto Copley) revisits the moors where he shared a childhood romance with Maleficent, then a young winged fairy. Returning to the older, lovesick girl, he essentially roofies her. Waking alone, she's horrified to discover that Stefan has clipped her wings. His daughter, Princess Aurora (Elle Fanning), is reduced to a supporting role, but a heavy still has to die, as all irredeemable Disney villains must. Ah, but it's not Maleficent. In this unsettling revision, she's a victim, and her trauma is palpable. Fun for the whole family! (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Million Dollar Arm ★★★ As formulaic baseball pictures go, Disney's Jerry Maguire-like tale of a beleaguered sports agent doesn't quite hit a home run, but it reaches base thanks to a winning script by Thomas McCarthy, who navigates the predictable tropes of the genre like a pro, and Jon Hamm, who uses his gravelly voice to project the world-weariness that his central role requires. As JB Bernstein, the agent who faces stiff competition from bigger-bank-rolled competitors, Hamm brings his A-game for director Craig Gillespie, who coaches a team of seasoned actors, including Lake Bell, Bill Paxton, Alan Arkin and Aasif Mandvi, as Bernstein's partner Aash. Mounting an unconventional recruitment strategy, Bernstein travels to untapped India to find cricket players (Slumdog Millionaire's Madhur Mittal and Life of Pi's Suraj Sharma) suited to pitching in the major leagues. Based on a true story, Million Dollar Arm scores a solid triple. (In the suburbs.)

A Million Ways to Die in the West ★ With a title like A Million Ways to Die in the West, one wishes that director, producer, co-writer and star Seth MacFarlane might have written a painful death for his cowardly character, a sheep farmer named Albert, as penance for having made a spoof this remarkably unfunny. The Family Guy creator has assembled an impressive cast, including Oscar winner Charlize Theron, Amanda Seyfried, Giovanni Ribisi, Sarah Silverman, Neil Patrick Harris and Liam Neeson, who made for a better villain when voicing a character created from LEGO. But then, The LEGO Movie understood Western movie tropes far better than MacFarlane, whose only point of reference for the genre appears to be Back to the Future Part III, which might explain this film's cameo from Christopher Lloyd and a certain DeLorean. Yep, expect a lot of pop culture references in place of punch lines, plus a million ways to kill a joke. If you enjoy fart humor set in the Old West, Mel Brooks' Blazing Saddles just hit home video in a wonderful new 40th anniversary edition—this is just a crappy imitation. (At Boston Common, Fenway, Somerville and in the suburbs.)

UNDER THE GUN The Rover, set in the Australian Outback, is a post-apocalyptic tale about a drifter searching for the men who stole his car.

Neighbors ★★ A movie directed by Nicholas Stoller (Forgetting Sarah Marshall), starring Seth Rogen and Rose Byrne? Must be a Judd Apatow production, right? Perhaps, if it ran more than two hours—but this comedy about a couple, their newborn and their war with the frat next door is a scant 96 minutes long. Sounds like a good thing, until you watch it and realize it would elicit more laughs if cut down to, say, trailer length—and, truth be told, the trailer was pretty amusing. So, naturally, the best bits appear in said trailer. Despite a delightful comedic turn by Zac Efron (who knew?) as Teddy Sanders, leader of Delta Psi Beta and tormentor of Mac and Kelly Radner (Rogen and Byrne), aided by Greek brothers Pete (Dave Franco, further distinguishing himself from real-life brother James) and Scoonie (an underutilized, way underdressed Christopher Mintz-Plasse), many setups go nowhere, and what few punch lines exist are obvious and mostly miss their mark. When Rogen's Mac argues that he should be the Kevin James surrogate, another realization hits: He already is. (At Boston Common, Fenway, Somerville and in the suburbs.)

The Rover ★★★ Australian director David Michod flees the Melbourne backdrop of his first feature (2010's Animal Kingdom) for the scorched earth of many an Ozploitation thriller, taking actor Guy Pearce along for the ride again. The Rover takes place "10 years after the collapse," and that's all the setup needed for this nihilistic trip through a lawless land, as Pearce's bearded, emaciated and single-minded drifter tracks down the men who stole his sole possession—his car. As viewers of the Mad Max films all know, a set of wheels is just about the only thing that matters in the Outback. And if you happen to come across the mentally challenged brother (a scuzzied-up Robert Pattinson, impressing with a range that runs darker than Twilight) of the leader of the trio that carjacked you, all the better. From this murderous gang to the enterprising woman (Gillian Jones) who pimps out her grandson, this is a violent downer in a genre that trades in bleakness (Wake in Fright, anyone?). Bring water—and some tourniquets. (At Kendall Square.)

X-Men: Days of Future Past ★★★ Fanboys might breathlessly protest: "Kitty Pryde can't do that! Her powers only allow her to phase herself and others through objects, not through the decades! Plus, in the comic books, she's the one who's projected into the past!" Correct, nerdlingers, but as popular as Juno's Ellen Page may be (she reprises her role as Pryde in the third X-Men film helmed by Bryan Singer), she ain't this franchise's star. So, Singer sends Hugh Jackman's Wolverine back to 1973, where he must reunite former (and future) friends Professor Charles Xavier and Erik Lehnsherr/Magneto (James McAvoy and Michael Fassbender, portraying younger versions of Patrick Stewart and Ian McKellen's characters). But bringing these bitter frenemies together is just the beginning. The three, aided by Hank McCoy/Beast (Nicholas Hoult), must prevent shapeshifting Mystique (Jennifer Lawrence) from assassinating mutant-phobe scientist Bolivar Trask (Peter Dinklage), an event that would set in motion the end of Homo sapiens and Homo superiors alike. Sound convoluted? It is, but it also makes for one of the better entries among the seven films set in Marvel's mutant universe. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

BACK TO SCHOOL Jonah Hill and Channing Tatum star as bumbling undereover cops in 22 Jump Street, the sequel to 21 Jump Street.

MUSIC

Edited by Sarah Hagman

FLIGHT CHECK While Air Traffic Controller's Dave Munro was directing airplanes in the Navy, he was also working on his own takeoff plans. The local indie act's frontman mined much of the material for their music from his experiences during deployment. And since their 2009 debut, the band has enjoyed success at home and nationwide: 2012's Nordo scored "Best Album" at the 2013 New England Music Awards, and they were nominated for an MTV VMA for "Best Break-Out Artist." Reminiscent of the Decemberists, their catchy beats and bright harmonies land at the Sinclair on June 27 for a local bill with Parks, the Field Effect and Bent Shapes. / Hannah Feeney

MUSEUMS & GALLERIES

Edited by Sarah Hagman

STYLE WARS The force is strong with photographer Dale May. The Parsons grad has gone from snapping photos of celebrities like Amy Pochler and Jared Leto to shooting stars of a different variety. For his series LEGO Wars, May gave a high-fashion makeover to a collection of limited-edition Star Wars LEGO figurines. His glossy spin on the pop-culture playthings includes a Chanel-clad C-3PO, a Karl Lagerfeld-inspired Darth Vader and a cheeky Princess Leia. You may have to wait until 2015 for Episode VII, but DTR Modern Galleries welcomes you to the dark side June 30 through July 31. / Abagail Sullivan

BEYOND THE BROADCAST

With success on the airwaves, the big screen and the page, bestselling author Garrison Keillor is a bona fide triple threat. His long-running weekly radio show—A Prairie Home Companion, based out of Minnesota—spawned a 2006 film of the same name, starring Keillor alongside Meryl Streep and Lindsay Lohan. His latest venture is The Keillor Reader, a collection of his best fiction, nonfiction and poetry—pulled from The New Yorker, The Atlantic and his various novels and newspaper columns—in addition to never-before-published work and excerpts from his signature monologue, "The News from Lake Wobegon." Tune in on June 26 at Brookline Booksmith. / Julianne McShane

We Salute Boston's Finest Restaurants and Clubs

CENTRAL WHARF CO., the Financial District's newest eatery!

Restaurants

THE BLACK ROSE [160 State Street, Boston, 617-742-2286, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Voted one of America's top ten Irish establishments, The Black Rose is Boston's premier Irish pub and restaurant. Established in 1976, the pub is located in the historic Faneuil Hall/Quincy Market area of Boston, and known far and wide for its convivial atmosphere, good food and live Irish entertainment. The menu features honest, made-from-scratch food including traditional Irish fare, award winning clam chowder, fish and chips, native lobster, aged Black Angus cuts of beef, and of course Mother Swceney's corned beef – a recipe from Mother Sweeney herself! For thirty years The Black Rose has offered live Irish music seven nights a week. Memorable guests on stage have included members of the Chieftans, flutist James Galway, Tommy Makim, Liam Clancy, John Denver, and a once relatively unknown member of an Irish rock group called U2.

BROWNSTONE [11 Dartmouth Street, Boston, MA, 617-867-4142, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Situated on the border of Back Bay and the South End, Brownstone is named for the style and elegance reflective of the architecture of Boston's two neighborhoods. From the hardwood flooring to the Venetian plaster ceiling, the interior exudes classic warmth with a sleek and intimate bar made of mahogany and granite. Brownstone's menu features small plates with big flavors! It also has one of the best brunches in Back Bay and Monthly Beer and Wine Dinners.

CENTRAL WHARF CO. [160 Milk Street, Boston. 617-451-9460, centralwharf@irishconnection.com] The most recent addition to the Glynn Hospitality Group portfolio, Central Wharf Co. located on Milk Street is the newest hot spot in the financial district. Whether you are coming for dinner or meeting friends for some of our hand crafted cocktails, Central Wharf's welcoming atmosphere is reaffirmed by its gastronomic offerings. With a focus on healthy preparations and locally sourced ingredients, their simple comfort foods concepts are enhanced buy their contemporary accompaniment

COOGANS [171 Milk Street, Boston, 617-451-7415, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Located on the corner of laid back and good times, Coogan's is a business man's retreat by day and party people destination by night. Just on the edge of the Financial District, Coogan's is a cozy little neighborhood bar. Friendly Staff serves up fresh American style pub food and some of the best deals in Boston.

FAJITAS & 'RITAS [25 West Street (near Boston Common) Boston, 617-426-1222, fajitasandritas.com] Established in 1989, Fajitas & 'Ritas is an award winning, good-vibe, "unabashedly fun" restaurant and bar featuring fresh Texas cuisine. Its namesake specialties include a variety of sizzling fajitas and frosty margaritas at Cheap Eats prices. Enjoy generous portions of fresh and healthy food while you relax in this down-to-earth and funky spot...or... kick back at the bar and sip some "honest margaritas".

FORUM [755 Boylston St Boston MA 02116, 857-991-1831, forumboston.com] Gather, indulge, repeat! Forum is located across from the Mandarin Oriental hotel and Lord & Taylor shops, overlooking glitzy Boylston Street, a hotspot for locals, tourists and celebrities. Two distinct floors, al fresco dining, two bars, and a modern function room for up to 60 guests. Indulge in New American cuisine such as Duck Confit, Halibut on Lobster Chorizo Risotto, Bone Marrow Encrusted Filet, or Wild Mushrooms Gnocchi. Open Daily.

HURRICANE O'REILLY'S [150 Canal Street, Boston, 617-722-0161, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] It's Hurricane season on Canal Street! The spirit of Mardi Gras and the French Quarter in the heart of the city. Serving Irish, American and Cajun specialties and conveniently located just steps away from the TD Garden. Voted best "Hockey Bar" in Boston by USA today, Hurricane's is the perfect place to gather pre- and post- game. After the sun sets on Canal Street, Hurricane's lights up into one of Boston's hottest nightclubs with a top 40 play list, illuminating disco lights and 6,800 square feet of Mardi Gras spirit.

MISTRAL [223 Columbus Ave, Boston, 617-867-9300, mistralbistro.com] Located in Boston's stylish South End, Mistral features the award winning French Mediterranean cuisine of Chef/Owner Jamie Mammano. The dining room's high ceilings and arched floor to ceiling windows encircle the candlelit room and evoke a warm feeling of casual sophistication. Le Salon du Mistral, Mistral's private dining room provides an intimate setting for gatherings of 60 seated for brunch, lunch and dinner and up to 80 for a cocktail reception. Sunday Brunch. Dinner Sunday-Saturday. Complimentary car service available in metro Boston.

NUBAR [16 Garden St., Cambridge MA, 02138, 617-234-1365, nubarcambridge.com] Nubar is an elegant, but comfortable neighborhood restaurant in the Harvard Square area. Chef Bill Flumerfelt's menu is creative American, with Mediterranean accents, sourcing locally whenever available. The wine list and our original cocktails will tickle your palette – great flavors for reasonable $.Whether you're in our fireside lounge, at our glowing honey onyx bar, or on our leather banquettes in the main dining room, you'll love our space.

OSTRA [1 Charles Street South, Boston, 617.421.1200, www.ostraboston.com] Ostra, located in Boston's Back Bay, is a contemporary Mediterranean seafood restaurant. Chef/Owner Jamie Mammano and Executive Chef Mitchell Randall focus on specialty seafood found throughout the Mediterranean and regions within the U.S. The dining room at Ostra evokes a sense of style and sophistication in a comfortable and inviting setting. Ostra also offers a fine bar and lounge area featuring live piano entertainment. Ostra's private dining room accommodates up to 42 for

What happens when you cross a charity gala with a gay circuit party? You get ClimACTS!—the outrageous annual fundraiser for The Theater Offensive, which paid tribute to the late, great Cambridge philanthropist Joan Parker.

The Wilbur Theatre was transformed into a decadent nightclub with go-go boys and scantily clad acrobats, women in fetish gear brandishing whips, a silent auction of an At-Home Orgy Kit and a live auction that included the opportunity to be a fluffer on a porn film.

The evening's main attraction, however, was Broadway sensation Billy Porter, who mixed and mingled with a crowd that included all the usual suspects and a few wild cards, among them: Joan's son, contemporary dance deity David Parker, Maverick Men Cole and Hunter, sneaker pimp Jay Gordon and his delectable designer wife, Alina Wolhardt, exhibitionist extraordinaire Ricardo Rodriguez with his button-cute husband, Michael Kelley, the latter's beefcake brothers, Bobby and Brian, stunning blond academic Barbara Grossman, fitness guru Chad Flahive with the tall, dark and handsome Patrick Weiss, Boston Ballet star John Lam and his handsome husband, John Ruggieri, scorchingly hot Brazilian painter Fernando DeOliveira, absurdly sexy videographer Ernesto Galan, smoldering bee expert Noah Wilson-Rich, DJ to the stars Nathanael Bluhm, a few guys in assless underwear or jock-straps, and one man who looked flustered when a topless woman offered him a tray of sushi.

The entertainment, meanwhile, began with a Cirque du Soleil contortionist and continued with operatic N.Y. drag queen Shequida and a hilariously raunchy burlesque act by La Chica Boom. Then Porter performed, and the crowd went wild.

The night's best remark: "What pediatric oncologist doesn't need a leather collar and nipple clamps?"

ONLY HIS STYLIST KNOWS FOR SURE

It looked like a flock of flamingos had invaded the InterContinental Boston when the Breast Cancer Research Fund held its annual Hot Pink Party—Bright Lights, Pink City.

Molly Ringwald was about the only one missing from a fashionable crowd that included Palm Beach doyenne Sandy Krakoff, party pair Linda and Dan Waintrup, blond bombshells Jaclyn Cashman and Regina Winslow, cosmetics magnate Leonard Lauder, the flawless Penny Fireman, investment guru Peter Lynch and the lovely Carolyn, the first ladies of Red Sox Nation, Linda Henry and Stacey Lucchino, Patriots patriarch Bob Kraft and his toothsome lady friend, Ricki Noel Lander, the incomparable Jane Moss, the swanlike Jennifer Herman, emcee extraordinaire Kelley Tuthill, the bejeweled Evelyn Treacy and her other half, Michael, adorable do-gooder Erin Duggan Lynch, one-woman Mardi Gras Ashley Bernon and her gorgeous mother-in-law, Kay, and pretty much everyone who's anyone on the city's charitable scene.

It was a crowd that doesn't impress easily, but there was still some squealing and a bit of hysteria when Jon Bon Jovi entered the ballroom after dinner to do an acoustic set.

"I have wanted to sleep with that man since I was 13," said one woman, whose male companion responded, "Me, too."

However, the evening's funniest remark came from the woman who said, "His hair can't be real. He'd have to be part Shetland pony."

I SEE LONDON, I SEE FRANCE

It was an evening worthy of "Mrs. Jack" herself when the Isabella Stewart Gardner Museum hosted its summer soiree, The Gardner Remixed.

The evening began with cocktails and light bites in the courtyard, followed by what was possibly the coolest performance that's taken place in Calderwood Hall: a concert by the astonishingly talented and beautiful Shea Rose.

She played three sets, each with a distinct format: a poem by Maya Angelou (who had died the week before), a modern arrangement of a piece of classical music, and a few original songs and covers in Rose's genre-bashing soul/rock/hip-hop style. Between sets, guests played musical chairs, moving up or down a floor in the concert hall, and there was much air-kissing in the stairwells among an eclectic crowd that included literary agent and noted eccentric Esmond Harmsworth, Sufi mystic Thalassa Scholl, blond beauty Johanna Hynes, the absurdly sexy duo of Frank Amelia and Stephen Labuda, power chick Malia Lazu, handsome hipster Seven Cohen and so on and so forth.

The evening's funniest remark: Looking up from the first floor at the transparent balustrades on the balconies, one man said, "Renzo Piano must really enjoy looking up women's skirts." ◆
